This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

THE Council of the American Antiquarian Society determined many years since to include LECHFORD'S NOTE-BOOK in its publications. Mr. SAMUEL JENNISON, so long an active officer of the Society, had obtained the original manuscript from a friend, and had devoted much time to its study. He had made a beginning in preparing it for the press at the time of his death.

It will readily be seen that it is one of the most valuable documents which have been preserved, of the history of the first generation of Massachusetts. It is the daily record of the work done in the office of the only professional lawyer in the colony. His duties brought him into close relations with people of every class; and in more than one instance his memoranda throw light on social customs, on questions of local geography, on points of family history, and on the development of the political life of the country. Poor Lechford's own character, and the circumstances, almost pathetic, of his controversies with the leader of the colony, and of his return to England, are all elucidated in the volume.

The Council thanks all the gentlemen who have been connected with the publication of the volume for the interest which they have taken in it; and especially our associate, Mr. Samuel Jennison, of Boston, the present owner of the original manuscript, for permission to print it. It would not even now be published but for the personal care and attention of our lamented friend Judge FOSTER, who studied, with a lawyer's sympathy, these memorials of the life of the first New England lawyer. But for his death the volume would have been earlier completed.

The expense of printing has been partially met by a special subscription among the members of the Society, the Publishing Fund being unfortunately so small that the expense of printing the regular "Proceedings" of the Society exhausts all its income.

For the Committee of Publication,

EDWARD E. HALE.

EDITOR'S NOTE.

SOME years ago the late Mr. Samuel Jennison began the work of transcription and preparation for publication of Lechford's Note-book, but was unable to carry it to a conclusion. Mr. J. Hammond Trumbull afterwards prepared a portion of the Note-book for publication, but did not finish it, owing to his work in his edition of Lechford's Plain Dealing.

Two years or more ago the late Judge Foster desired to publish the Note-book for the American Antiquarian Society, and with his son, Mr. Alfred D. Foster, did much in the way of preparation. Finding, however, that he was unable to continue the work through the pressure of his professional duties, Judge Foster requested me to take the work in the state in which it then stood and see it through the press.

This I have now done; and after many vexatious delays the Note-book has reached publication. My own work has been in the line of an arranger and compiler of the work of others, as well as in that of original research. All the indexes, abstracts, notes, and other papers drawn up by Mr. Jennison, Mr. Trumbull, Judge Foster, and Mr. A. D. Foster were put into my hands, and I have found them of the greatest use. The translation of the short-hand was done in great part by Mr. Trumbull, and partly by Mr. William

P. Upham. The notes to the first one hundred pages, prepared by Mr. Trumbull for his projected edition, have been bodily transferred by me, with such corrections as that gentleman desired to make. Such notes are marked with a [T].

I have had at every step in my work the careful guidance and assistance of my father, the Rev. Dr. Edward E. Hale, who has given much of his time to a careful revision of the proofs, as well as most unfailing sympathy and interest to every portion of the work. I must also gladly acknowledge the kind and useful assistance rendered by Mr. John Ward Dean, Mr. J. Hammond Trumbull, Dr. Samuel A. Green, Mr. Charles Deane, Mr. William S. Appleton, Mr. Edmund M. Barton, librarian, and Mr. Reuben Colton, assistant librarian, of the Society, in supervising and correcting the proof-sheets of a great part of the volume. I should like also to thank very cordially Mr. George Lamb, Mr. William B. Weeden, Mr. Henry H. Edes, and Mr. Nathan Matthews, Jr., for assistance given in matters with which they were especially conversant.

The Introductory Life is that prepared by Mr. J. Hammond Trumbull for his edition of the Plain Dealing. With his consent, at the suggestion and desire of Judge Foster, and through the courtesy of Mr. William P. Lunt, it is now prefixed to this edition of the Note-book.

A SKETCH

OF THE

LIFE OF THOMAS LECHFORD.

BY J. HAMMOND TRUMBULL.

OF the birth and parentage of Thomas Lechford, or of his early life, I have no certain knowledge. His surname is that of a family which, at about the middle of the sixteenth century, became seated at Leigh, near Reigate, in the county of Surrey, where Henry Lechford, great-grandson of a Thomas Lechford who lived in the reign of Edward IV. (1461–1482), bought the manors of Shellwood and Charlwood, with other estates. This Henry dying Sept. 27, 1567, left a son, Richard, born in 1547, who was knighted. Sir Richard Lechford was twice married: first, to Ann, daughter of George Lusher, by whom he had two sons, John and Thomas; and, secondly, to Eleanor, daughter of William Morgan, of Chilworth, Esq. Henry, a son of the second marriage, died in 1606, before his father, but left a son, Richard (born about December, 1594), who inherited the estates of his grandfather on the death of the latter, July 10, 1611. John and Thomas, above named, sons of Sir Richard by his first wife, were living in 1606, when they are named in a deed of settlement by their father on his second wife and her children.[1] Their nephew, Richard Lechford, was knighted by James I. Early in the reign of Charles I. he was enrolled in the band of "Gentlemen Pensioners," who constituted the king's body-guard. Like many other courtiers of his day he became a Roman Catholic, and found his new religion no bar to royal favor, notwithstanding the unabated severity of the laws against "popish recusants." His eldest daughter, Letitia ("alias Bridget," as she is named in the record), remained a Protestant, and about 1633 was confirmed in the Church of England, to the great displeasure of her father.[1] Not long afterwards, while Sir Richard was in attendance upon the king in his journey to Scotland, this daughter Letitia and a younger sister Mary, who had been placed under the care of an aunt living near London, were detained by warrant from the High Commission when about to sail from England for some foreign port. Their father alleged that they had embarked without his knowledge, and were attempting to escape from his authority; but another and more probable version of the story is given by a well-informed writer (the Rev. George Gerrard, the gossiping London correspondent of the Earl of Strafford), in a letter dated May 1, 1634:[2] —

[1] Manning and Bray's History of Surrey, ii. 181, 184–185, 188.

"Sir Richard Lashford,[3] a pensioner in ordinary was sending two of his daughters to the nunneries beyond the seas; being to take shipping in some of the Kentish ports, they were stopp'd and sent back to London. My Lord's Grace of Canterbury [Laud] being made acquainted with it sent for the father, who offered to give caution that they should not go out of England; but my Lord asked him, whether he would engage himself that they should conform themselves to the religion of the Church of England, which he refused. He asked then of him, of what religion he was? He said, A Romish Catholick, and but lately converted. He offered him both the Oaths, which peremptorily he refused. The Archbishop then told him, he was not a fit servant to be of the King's principal guard, that would not take the oath of allegiance unto his Majesty. Since he hath been brought before the Lords, absolutely put out of his place, and another sworn into it."

[2] Strafford's Letters and Dispat., i. 242.

[3] So the name appears to have been generally pronounced, and was occasionally written. Evelyn (Diary, ii. 56, Bohn's edit.) mentions, under date of Sept. 13, 1670, going "to visit Sir Richard Lashford, [his] kinsman." Elsewhere, we find the same name written Leecheforde. See note 2 on the next page.

A few weeks afterwards the same correspondent wrote:[1] —

"The Pensioner, Sir Richard Lashford, was again called before the Lords, when the oath of allegiance was again offered to him, but he utterly refused it. So order was given to the Attorney to indite him in the King's Bench of a Premunire; but being brought thither, he took it before the Judges, which if he had done before, 't is likely he had not been put from his Pensioner's place."

In other words, the influence of the court upon the judges, or a "letter of grace and protection," such as the king about this time was accustomed to grant to his courtiers who were papists, would have stayed proceedings against him for recusancy.

In November, 1634, Sir Richard sold the manor of Shellwood and other estates in Surrey, and subsequently resided at or near Dorking (in the same county), where he died Sept. 14, 1671.[2]

The recurrence of the name of Thomas in several generations of the Lechfords of Shellwood; the fact that the surname was by no means common, and does not appear to have been represented in England by any other family than this, of the rank of gentry; with other considerations which it is unnecessary to mention here, — render it highly probable, in fact nearly certain, that the author of Plain Dealing and the possessor of this now printed Note-book was of this stock, and nearly related to the last-mentioned Sir Richard Lechford, Knt., 1634.

In the address "To the Reader," in Plain Dealing, Thomas Lechford describes himself as "a student or practiser at law." An entry in the Note-book[3] shows that he had been a member of Clement's Inn before he came to New England; and he resumed his residence there after his return to London, in 1641, as the titlepage of Plain Dealing informs us. In an order of the General Court of Massachusetts, made in 1647, he is described as "an ordinary solicitor in England."[1] It does not appear that he was ever called to the bar. The Inns of Chancery, of which Clement's was one, were so called "probably because they were appropriated to such clerks as chiefly studied the forming of writs, which was the province of the cursitors, who are officers of chancery, and such as belong to the courts of common pleas and king's bench."[2] In Stowe's time they were "chiefly filled with attorneys, solicitors, and clerks." By an order of the judges, April 15, 1630, "attorneys and solicitors, which are but ministerial persons of an inferior nature," though permitted to occupy chambers in the inns of chancery, were excluded from the inns of court, and consequently from a call to the bar.[3] In his defence before the court of magistrates at Boston, in December, 1640,[4] Lechford said of himself: "I am no pleader by nature; oratory I have little, . . . and if I had never so expert a faculty that way, I should not now use it, . . . and as for the other part of pleading which consisteth in chirography,[5] wherein I had some little skill, I do not desire to use any of that," etc.

When Hugh Peters was lecturer in St. Sepulchre, in London, before the persecution of Laud drove him to Rotterdam, in 1629 or 1630, Lechford was one of his hearers, and "hung upon his ministry," as he expresses it in a letter to Peters, written in 1639.[6] Some years later, he was in Ireland, with Sir Thomas Wentworth (afterwards Earl of Strafford), then lord deputy. In what capacity he went, or how long he remained there, does not appear.[1] In 1640, when he contemplated departure from New England, he wrote to one of his correspondents that he was desirous to return to Ireland, "there to follow his old profession, where he had some hope of friendship."[2]

[5] This word appears to be used here in its more modern sense, for the business of a draughtsman and scrivener. In the old law, a chirographer signified "him in the Common Pleas office (in Communi Banco) that ingrosseth Fines in that Court acknowledged . . . and that writeth and delivereth the Indentures of them unto the parties" (Minsheu, 1627); and a chirograph was a bill, bond, or deed indented, written in the maker's own hand.

In the address "To the Reader" of Plain Dealing, he alludes to the fact, "well knowne unto many, that heretofore he suffered imprisonment, and a kind of banishment . . . for some acts construed to oppose, and as tending to subvert Episcopacie, and the settled Ecclesiastical government of England." His offence, as we learn from a couple of lines in Mr. Cotton's Way of Congregational Churches cleared, was his witnessing against the Bishops, in soliciting the cause of Mr. Prynne. In the judgment of Laud and of the High Commission, his crime could hardly have been greater, or have merited more severe punishment. Prynne, a barrister of Lincoln's Inn, had drawn upon himself the vengeance of the archbishop, by the publication, in 1633, of Histriomastix. He was indicted in the Star Chamber, found guilty of a libel, and condemned to a barbarous punishment, to be followed by imprisonment for life, for the crime of railing "not only against Stage Plays . . . but farther in particular against Hunting, Publique Festivals, Christmas-keeping, Bonfires and Maypoles," etc.[3] His real offence (as Hume suggests) was probably that he had, "in plain terms, blamed the hierarchy, the innovations in religious worship, and the new superstitions introduced by Laud." Four years afterwards, a renewal of this offence called for a yet more vindictive prosecution in the same court. On the 14th of June, 1637, he, with Henry Burton, bachelor of divinity, and John Bastwick, a physician, was tried and convicted of "writing and publish-

[1] Wentworth was appointed lord deputy in January, 1632, but did not go to Ireland until July, 1633. In June, 1636, he came to London, remained about six months in England, and returned to Dublin in November. He was not again in London until September, 1639. In December, 1639, he was created Earl of Strafford and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (Strafford's Letters and Dispatches, i. 63, 84; ii. 430, 431; Nalson's Collection, i. 280).

ing seditious, schismatical, and libellous books against the hierarchy of the Church." They were sentenced to lose their ears in the pillory, to be fined £5,000 each to the king, to perpetual imprisonment in three remote places of the kingdom; and Prynne to be branded on both cheeks with the letters S. L., for a "Seditious Libeller." This barbarous sentence was executed in the palace yard at Westminster, June 30; "a spectacle no less strange than sad, to see three of several professions, the noblest in the kingdom, Divinity, Law, and Physick, exposed at one time to such an ignominious punishment, and condemned to it by Protestant magistrates, for such tenets in religion as the greatest part of Protestants in England held, and all the reformed churches in Europe maintained."[1] Immediately after summons was issued for Prynne's appearance before the court, he was shut up close prisoner, refused the use of pen, ink, or paper, and not permitted to consult counsel until very shortly before his trial. In his speech to the court he said: "I was deserted of all means by which I should have drawn my answer. . . . I had neither pen, ink, nor servant to do any thing for me; for my servant was then also close prisoner, under a pursuivant's hands." All who rendered the slightest service to Prynne or his fellow-offenders fell under condemnation. "One Gardener," a scrivener or clerk, who wrote from Prynne's dictation a petition to his judges, was apprehended, subjected to fourteen days imprisonment, and compelled to give a bond for appearance when called. His counsel, Holt and Tomlyns, did not dare to subscribe his answer, after it was drawn and engrossed. After the execution of his sentence, some of his friends visited him in Chester, on his way to his prison at Caernarvon. Those who had so offended were summoned before the Privy Council, cited into the High Commission at York, imprisoned and fined, and enjoined to make a public recantation.[2] It is not surprising that Lechford, for "soliciting" in Prynne's cause or otherwise assisting his defence, should have been severely dealt with. Of his punishment we know no more

From succeeding pages of his Note-book we gather some — but scanty and unsatisfactory — knowledge of his domestic relations. His wife is mentioned in 1639 and afterwards; and, as no evidence has been discovered of his marriage on this side of the water, we infer that she accompanied him from England; but he nowhere gives any information of her family, nor even introduces her Christian name. In July, 1640,[1] he writes: "I have not yet here an house of my owne to put my head in, or any stock going." He lived in a house, or part of a house, hired of Nathaniel Micklethwaite, of Boston, who was, I think, the agent or factor in New England of Richard Hutchinson, of London, and perhaps of Edward and William Hutchinson after their removal to Rhode Island.

It appears that he paid his rent until August, 1639, to Samuel Hutchinson, and subsequently to Mr. Micklethwaite, whose signature appears, on a page of the Note-book, to the lease of "the chamber etc.," at £5 per year, from Sept. 1, 1639. From the fact that the name of Thomas Savage often occurs as a witness to instruments drawn by Lechford, I conjecture that he was a near neighbor, or perhaps a fellow-tenant under the same roof. Occasional entries like the following give glimpses of the interior of "the chamber etc.," and of Lechford's manner of living:—

1641. "Mary Sherman came to my wife the twelveth day of Aprill, 1641."

Almost from the hour of his landing at Boston, he was regarded with distrust by those whose influence prevailed in state and church. First, because of his profession; for to "some of the magistrates," and doubtless to Governor Winthrop himself, the employment of "lawyers to direct men in their causes" seemed more objectionable than the custom of obtaining advice from the judges on an ex parte statement before the public hearing of the cause.[1] Winthrop himself, Bellingham, Humphrey, Dudley, Downing, — and perhaps Pelham and Bradstreet, — had been students of law in England; but on this side of the Atlantic their legal knowledge was not called into requisition except as it contributed to qualify them for seats in the Court of Magistrates or as legislators for the new colony; "no advocate being allowed," [2] and the exercise of the profession of an attorney being discountenanced so far as possible without absolute interdiction.

But Lechford was not only professionally but doctrinally objectionable. Though he came to New England, as he says, with a disposition to "lay aside all by-respects, to join with the Church here," "he could not be satisfied in diverse particulars," and "desired to open his mind in some material things of weight concerning the Christian faith" wherein he differed from the received belief of the Massachusetts churches. He was not long in giving to these points of difference more than a sufficient prominence. On his passage hither, he had discussed them with his fellow-passengers; and before, or soon after, his arrival, he made a written statement of his opinions and the arguments by which he sustained them, and placed the paper in the hands of Mr. Downing.[1] These opinions, which he tells us he "did not lightly or hastily take up, but upon good grounds and mature deliberation, long before he ventured to betake himself into these parts of the world,"[2] involved what magistrates and elders held to be fundamental errors, and such as prevented his reception to church fellowship. These errors, as stated by Mr. Cotton, were: "1. That the Antichrist described in the Revelation was not yet come, nor any part of that Prophecy yet fulfilled from the 4th chapter to the end. 2. That the Apostolick function was not yet ceased; but that there still ought to be such, who should by their transcendent Authority govern all churches."[3]

[1] Winthrop, ii. 36. "No judge can be wise enough to decide always with satisfaction to both parties," observes Mr. Savage, "after privately hearing, and of necessity, as it were, undertaking the cause of one, before issuing process."

Lechford himself conceived that his opinions on these controverted points "might be held, or not held, salva fide" and without impediment to church fellowship with those of opposite belief. Indeed modern orthodoxy, even of the most rigid type, would hardly insist on the identification of the pope of Rome with the prophetical antichrist, and a denial of the permanency of the apostolic function, as essential prerequisites to church communion, or for the elective franchise. But to the elders of the Bay, in 1638, — when the churches had not yet escaped the dangers of Antinomianism nor been thoroughly purged of all the eighty-two errors condemned by the synod of the year previous, — every deviation from the established creed was matter of grave importance. Moreover, although Lechford professed a disinclination to controversy, he certainly took no great pains to avoid it; so that before he had been many weeks in the Colony his peculiar views were somewhat widely made known, not only through oral discussions, but by means of two or three manuscript volumes of his composition, which he had tendered for the perusal of some of the jealous guardians of orthodoxy in the churches.

In the letter to Hugh Peters, before quoted, Lechford writes: "I showed you my books: you had not leisure to peruse them. I likewise, long before, showed my main book to Mr. Cotton. He had not leisure to read it; and the first draught of that Of Prophesie, it lay in his house at least five weeks." Peters had too much work before him, in New England and Old, for wasting his time over the crude speculations of an honest but narrow-minded enthusiast; and Mr. Cotton was perhaps less zealous in heresy-hunting, if not more tolerant of error, than before his own narrow escape from the censure of the synod of 1637 for an imputed taint of Hutchinsonianism. If Lechford had gone no farther to look for readers and provoke criticism, he might have fared better, — might have found a way at last to the fellowship of the churches and the favor of magistrates, and have lived and died in Massachusetts, in comfortable circumstances and with a more favorable opinion of "rigid separations" and "electorie ways" than he has expressed in Plain Dealing. But, in an evil hour, he sought counsel of the deputy-governor, Thomas Dudley, a man whose conscientiousness was as morbid, his vision as narrow, and his prejudices as strong as Lechford's own; who was so zealous for the purity of the faith that he magnified to a mountain every mole-hill of error, and saw in the toleration of new opinions a "cockatrice's egg,"

> "To poison all with heresy and vice."

"After the court here ended," wrote Lechford to Hugh Peters, in January, 1639, "I delivered [my book] Of Prophesie to Mr. Deputy, to advise thereof as a private friend, as a godly man and a member of the Church, whether it were fit to be published. The next news I had was, that at first dash he accused me of heresy, and wrote to Mr. Governor that my book was fitter to be burned. . . ."

The Court to which Lechford refers was probably the Quarter Court held at Boston, Dec. 4, 1638. On the eleventh of the same month Dudley wrote from Roxbury to Winthrop: —

"Sir. Since my cominge home, I have read over Mr. Lechford's booke, and finde the scope thereof to be erroneous and dangerous, if not hereticall, according to my conception — His tenet beinge that the office of apostleship doth still continew and ought soe to doe till Crist's coming, and that a Church hath now power to make apostles as our Saviour Crist had when hee was heere. Other things there are, but I pray you consider of this, and the inseparable consequences of it: I heare that Mr. Cotton and Mr. Rogers know somethinge of the matter, or man, with whome you may if you please conferre: I heare also that hee favoureth Mr. Lentall [1] and hath so exprest himselfe since Mr. Lentall was questyoned by the ministers: It is easyer stoppinge a breach when it begins, then afterwards: wee sawe our error in sufferinge Mrs. Huchinson too longe. I have sent you the booke herewith that in stead of puttinge it to the presse as hee desireth it may rather be putt into the fire as I desire: But I pray you lett him know that I have sent the booke to you, that after you have read it (which I think you said you had not yet done) it may be restored to him. . . . I suppose the booke to be rather coppyed out then contryved by Mr. Lechford, hee beinge I thinck, not soe good a grecyan and hebritian as the author undertakes to be." [2]

Either Winthrop's zeal was less lively, or he saw less danger in the new heresy and its "inseparable consequences" than his colleague. Before the end of the month Dudley wrote again: —

"For Mr. Lechford and his booke, you say nothing, and I have since heard that the worst opynion in his book (which I thinck I shall proove to be heresy) is taken upp by others. Nowe seeing that this is the way Sathan invades us by (viz. new opynions and heresyes) it behooves us to be the more vigilant, and to stirr upp our zeale and stopp breaches at the beginninge, least forbearance hurt us as it did before." [3]

Lechford's character appears in a very favorable light in his comment on the course pursued by Mr. Dudley. After disavowing the chief heresy imputed to him, "though indeed my words might have been so strained," he adds: —

> "I speak according to my light, and dare do no otherwise. If hotly [pressed by?] Mr. Deputy, I impute it to his zeal against errors: I am not angry with him for it. But when I saw seven shepherds and eight principal men called out against me, as if I were an Assyrian [the allusion is to Micah v. 5], I thought there might be something in me to be reproved, and that it concerned me to look about me. I dealt plainly. . . . Thereupon my book was referred to the consideration of the Elders."

This reference to the elders was the occasion of his addressing to Hugh Peters, Jan. 3, 1638–1639, the letter from which several extracts have been introduced. In an interview with some of the magistrates he had "intimated a word of [his] other main book," treating of Antichrist and of the millennial kingdom of Christ. "They all now press me to produce that. I told them it was not ready for their view: I must fair write it, and alter some things: yet at length, upon promise that I should have it again (for if it be no error, I will not part with it for £100) I promised to let them see it. I have accordingly left it to Mr. Deputy and the Governor (who also desired to see it)." This book, with the one Of Prophesie, was to be submitted to an assembly of the Elders; and Lechford writes to request Mr. Peters that he would himself be one of the council, "Mr. Ward another, and Mr. Parker of Newbury; and that Mr. Norton and Mr. Phillips may likewise be called;" who should "soundly and maturely advise and consult of the matter," with "all lawfull favour" to the writer.

I find no subsequent mention of this council, unless it be referred to by Mr. Cotton, in the passage already cited (from the Way of the Congregational Churches cleared, pt. i. p. 71), where Lechford is said to have been "dealt withall both in conference and (according to his desire) in writing." Neither mode of dealing was effectual to convince him of error, nor would the elders admit that his opinions might be held "salva fide." So he was compelled to remain without the church; and exclusion from church fellowship carried with it exclusion from the privileges of a freeman and disqualification for civil office.

His professional ability was not inconsiderable; but the field for its exercise was restricted. "Kept from all place of preferment in the Commonwealth," he was "forced to get his living by writing petty things, which scarce found him bread," as he complained to his friends in England, after two years' residence here.[1] Though his imputed heterodoxy did not prevent his occasional employment, by those of sounder faith, as a conveyancer, scrivener, or draughtsman, his receipts for such professional services were pitifully small. His Note-book contains not only the record of every instrument drawn by him while he was in this country, but an account of the compensation he received; from which it appears that his professional income, for the two years after his arrival, was a little more than £47; about £9 of which was in debts remaining unpaid in July, 1640.

In June, 1639, when he had been nearly a year in Boston, he presented to the General Court certain propositions[2] for the regulation of civil actions and for the recording of judicial proceedings. He had perhaps been encouraged to hope — for he states that his propositions were "made upon request" — that the Court, notwithstanding his ineligibility to public office, would employ his services in the humbler capacity of clerk or public notary, and provide for his support by giving him work to do for which his studies and experience peculiarly qualified him. His application was not successful. "The Court was willing to bestow employment upon me," he writes, "but they said to me that they could not do it for fear of offending the churches, because of my opinions." Whereupon he thought good to propose to them certain propositions, which the reader will find set down at large in the Note-book, p. 58.

It was in response to this application, probably, that he was "dealt withal, according to his desire, in writing," as Mr. Cotton has mentioned. Whether or not the Court gave favorable consideration to the proposition by which Lechford engaged himself to refrain from controversy for twelve months, on consideration of receiving employment, does not appear. But whatever good intentions in his behalf the magistrates, or some of them, may have had, were counteracted by his own imprudence.

In the summer of 1639 he was employed by William Cole and his wife Elizabeth, for the prosecution of an action against her brother, Francis Doughty, of Taunton, whom she charged with having defrauded her of her marriage-portion and her share in their father's estate. To the preparation of this case the Note-book shows that Lechford gave much attention.[1] On the trial before a jury, at the Quarter Court in September, his zeal for his clients betrayed him into an indiscretion (to use no harsher term) which subjected him to the deserved censure of the court, and gave occasion — not wholly displeasing to the magistrates, perhaps — to prohibit him from the exercise of the profession of an advocate, to which, as has already been intimated, he does not appear to have had any legitimate title. The order of the Court is in these words: —

"Mr. Thomas Lechford, for going to the Jewry & pleading w^th^ them out of Court, is debarred from pleading any man's cause hereafter, unlesse his owne, and admonished not to p'sume to meddle beyond what hee shalbee called to by the Courte."[2]

Lechford submitted in a good spirit to this censure. A few days after receiving it, he presented to the General Court a petition for pardon, with a frank confession of his fault. Of this petition he has preserved a copy in his Note-book (p. 117), which is well worth reading, as characteristic of the man. His submission was probably accepted by the Court, and he was suffered to return to the practice of his profession as an attorney, which, under the restrictions imposed upon it, promised little improvement of his "low and poor estate."

In the autumn and winter of 1639 he received some slight assistance, in the way of employment, from the magistrates.

[1] See post, p. 171. [2] Mass. Col. Records, i. 270.

For Mr. Endicott, he had written "The Court booke[1] at 16[d] a sheete, 102 sheetes," and received £6 16*s.* some time in June or July. In November, after the surrender to Massachusetts of the Dover patent, he wrote "For the Country: The writing of receipt of the Inhabitants of Dover and Kittery and Oyster River into the Protection of this Jurisdiction: The Commission to Mr. Bradstreete for those places: The institution and limitation of the Councell of this Jurisdiction: Another of the same: Charta libertatis: The Act of the publique and private tenure of land: The division of the Plantation into shires:" for all which he received the sum of eleven shillings.[2] Not long afterwards he was employed in the more important task of transcribing the "breviat of laws," subsequently adopted, with some amendments, as the Body of Liberties.[3] While engaged in this work, — which in his hands we may be sure was something more than that of mere transcription, — he could not resist the temptation, or, as he chose to express it, "he conceived it his duty, in discharge of his conscience," and "as Amicus curiae, with all faithfulness to present" to the Governor and magistrates his objections to certain laws proposed to be embodied in the code.

In May, 1640, in "a paper intended for the honored John Winthrop," he expressed his convictions of the advantages and the necessity of submission to the King, and acknowledgment of the authority of the Church of England, "if it be but by way of advice;" frankly confessing that for himself he "disclaimed Parker" and "inclined to Hooker and Jewel as to government."[4] After this paper was drawn, Dudley was elected

[1] I cannot learn that this copy of the "Court Book" has been preserved. It was undoubtedly a transcript of the Colony Records, made for Mr. Endicott's own use or for that of the Salem Quarter Court. A. C. Goodell, Esq., of Salem, to whom I applied in the hope of discovering some trace of this volume, calls my attention to the agreement of the number of "sheets" with the folios of the Colony Records, from the first court at Charlestown, Aug. 23, 1630, to the end of the Quarter Court at Boston, June 4, 1639, making 202 pages (55–256 of the first volume of the Manuscript Records of the Governor and Company; pp. 73–268 of the printed Records), or 101 folios.

governor; and it is not likely that Lechford transferred to him the good advice prepared for Governor Winthrop.

The year during which he had conditionally promised to keep silence, "saving to the Elders," on matters of difference between himself and the churches, had now expired. He had been "seriously dealt withal," and had been indulged in his desire for "reasons in writing."[1] But his hope that "in some good time the reverend Elders and himself might come to a perfect, or at least a fair understanding," was less and less likely to be realized. He was becoming more dissatisfied with the condition of affairs in New England, both in church and commonwealth. In July, 1640, he wrote to England: "I know my friends desire to know whether I am yet of any better mind than some of my actions about the time of my coming away did show me to be. I do profess that I am of this mind and judgment, I thank God: that Christians cannot live hapily without Bishops, as in England, nor Englishmen without a king. Popular elections indanger people with war and a multitude of other inconveniences."[2] Of the people of Massachusetts he says, "I am not of them, in church or commonweal. Some bid me be gone: others labor with me to stay fearing my return will do their cause wrong; and loth am I to heare of stay, but am plucking up stakes with as much speed as I may, if so be I may be so happy as to arrive in Ireland, there at least to follow my old profession," etc. "Some silence my letters and will not dispute with me, I think either out of distrust of me, or else despaire of their cause; some cry out of nothing but Antichrist and the Man of Sin. . . . But few know my full mind in some things of weight whereof I do professe I was ignorant and misled in England. You may wonder how I am now reformed," etc.

"I never intended," he writes, "openly to oppose the godly here in anything I thought they mistooke."[3] If he maintained some reserve in the expression of his "full mind in some things," he certainly made no secret of his dislike of "electory ways" and of congregationalism, as is evident from the advice which he proffered to the Governor and magistrates, and from his queries propounded to the Elders of Boston, which challenged a discussion of the nature and constitution of a church and the validity of congregational ordination.

That his opinions, and his zeal in advocating them, made him obnoxious to the magistrates as well as to the Elders is no matter of surprise. When the course which had been taken with others who had similarly offended is considered, — when it is remembered that not only had teachers of doubtful orthodoxy, like Roger Williams and Wheelwright and Mrs. Hutchinson, been banished from the jurisdiction, but laymen of influence and position, like Stoughton and Aspinwall and Coggeshall, when suspected of a taint of heresy or "sedition," had been as summarily and as severely dealt with, — the leniency shown to Lechford is remarkable. It could hardly have been from motives of policy — only his own vanity could have suggested that it was from "fear his return would do their cause wrong" — that he was suffered to remain so long unmolested. It must rather have been owing to a conviction of his honesty, his conscientiousness, and possibly to his lack of influence and the slight danger of infection by his teachings. It would not be easy to find in the first fifty years of the history of Massachusetts another instance of so great tolerance of opinions so radically opposed as were Lechford's to the views of the founders of the colony, and so subversive of the constitution of civil government and of the church polity they sought to establish in New England. He was neither a freeman nor a church member, not even a householder; in the eye of the law he was merely a "transient person," who might be driven away with slight ceremony. His calling made him unwelcome; his creed, in the judgment of others besides Thomas Dudley, was "erroneous and dangerous, if not heretical." He questioned the validity of any non-episcopal ordination, and saw, in the exercise by the people of the right to elect their own rulers, the root of all evil. He would not acknowledge "a church without a bishop," and did not hesitate to express his belief that all was going wrong, and must go worse in "a state without a king." In the complacent consciousness of his own clearer light and well-grounded convictions, he felt it to be his duty to point out to Governor Winthrop, to Mr. Wilson, and to Mr. Cotton the errors wherein through ignorance they had gone astray, and were misleading others.[1] That he should have been permitted for two years and a half to hold his course unchecked, and that his unconcealed and somewhat aggressive dissent should have so long escaped censure, proves that the founders of Massachusetts were not incapable of the exercise of toleration, even though they might not give it a place among the virtues.

At length, however, their patience was exhausted. In September, 1640, for a new offence, with which his questioning of the Boston Elders may have had something to do, he was presented by the grand jury and summoned before the Court of Magistrates in December. When the General Court was in session (Oct. 7) they were "pleased to say something to him, as for good counsel about some tenets and disputations which he had held; advising him to bear himself in silence and as became him." A few weeks afterwards he writes in his Note-book: "I am summoned to appear in Court to-morrow, being the first of 10th, 1640. The Lord God direct me," etc. In a letter to England, dated December 19, he mentions having been "lately taken at advantage and brought before the magistrates, before whom, giving a quiet and peaceable answer [he] was dismissed with favour," etc.[2] Of this answer he preserved a copy, or perhaps the original draft, in shorthand, in his Note-book. Confessing that he had "too far meddled in some matters of church government and the like, which [he was] not sufficient to understand or declare," he threw himself on the mercy

[1] "O mercy, mercy, from all the powers of mercy in heaven and earth"— he wrote in 1640 — "to such as sin of ignorance!" And against this he modestly noted in the margin: "In the number of the ignorant I hold myself, and Mr. Burton, Mr. Prynne, and Dr. Bastwick, and a multitude more" (post, p. 159).

[2] "Our chiefe difference was about the foundation of the Church and Ministery, and what rigid separations may tend unto, what is to be feared, in case the most of the people here should remain unbaptized; etc." (Plain Dealing, p. 77).

of the Court. His submission was accepted, and the record shows that —

"Mr. Thomas Lechford, acknowledging hee had overshot himselfe, and is sorry for it, promising to attend his calling, and not to meddle w^th^ controversies, was dismissed."[1]

Mr. Savage, in a note to Winthrop (vol. ii. p. 36), cites this as a "curiosity in legislative and judicial economy." He was under the impression that the engagement "not to meddle with controversies" was inconsistent with the promise "to attend his calling," since "the very calling by which he sought to earn his bread was that of an attorney." The inconsistency disappears on learning from Lechford himself that he was brought before the Quarter Court on the presentment of a grand jury, and that the controversies in which he had "too far meddled" concerned "matters of church government and the like," — "the foundation of the church and the ministry, and what rigid separations may tend unto." He acknowledged his fault, promised amendment, and the Court dismissed the complaint. Lechford certainly did not feel that he had been hardly dealt by. He avers that he was "dismissed with favour, and respect promised him by some of the chiefe, for the future."[2]

Some time in 1640 he was enrolled in the "Military Company of Massachusetts," afterwards the "Ancient and Honorable Artillery." He perhaps owed his election to his intimacy with Thomas Savage, one of the original members of this company, and to the friendship of the captain, Robert Keayne.

Among those with whom Lechford appears to have been on very friendly terms was George Story, "a young merchant of London," as Winthrop calls him, who lodged in the house of Richard Sherman, and who was the chief instigator of the proceedings against Captain Keayne in the famous "sow case." For six or seven years from its commencement in 1636, this "great business upon a very small occasion"

[1] Mass. Col. Rec., i. 310. [2] Plain Dealing, p. 77.

divided the people of Boston into factions, disturbed the peace of the churches, had an influence in elections, awakened a "democratical spirit" throughout the colony, and at last (in 1643) came near bringing about a radical change in the constitution of the General Court, by depriving the magistrates of the exercise of a negative voice on the action of the house of deputies.[1]

In 1641 the quarrel had not yet reached its height, but it had already assumed formidable proportions. That Lechford should become implicated in it was inevitable. The only attorney in Boston, and the common friend of Story and of Keayne, he received the confidences of both parties, tried his hand at peacemaking, gave advice to both, and of course offended both; besides exposing himself to the suspicion of wrong-dealing. The trouble which this affair occasioned him may have contributed to hasten his return to England. About a week before he sailed from Boston, he drew up a statement of his connection with the case for the purpose of clearing himself of "divers imputations" of having promoted litigation by advice which, "in the simplicity of his heart," he had given to Mr. Story and Goody Sherman. This paper is dated July 24, 1641. In the first draft in the Note book he had written: "Being purposed some time at least to visit my native —;" but drew his pen through the unfinished sentence, and interlined in its place: "Now being purposed, God willing, to visit my friends in England." In another paragraph, alluding to a conversation which he had with Story, "one Lord's day when the Sacrament was at Boston," he fixes the time by adding, "being the next day as I remember after the newes that it was supposed Mr. Prynne had sent me money for my passage."

Mr. Cotton says that Lechford, "when he saw he could not defend the Error [that the Apostolick function was not yet ceased] but by building again the Bishops, against whom he had witnessed (as he said) in soliciting the cause of Mr. Prynne, he rather then he would revoke his present tenent, acknowledged he was then in an Error when he took part with Mr. Prynne and Mr. Burton, and therefore he would now return to England again, to reduce these famous witnesses from the Error of their way. And accordingly, away he went." [1]

[1] See Winthrop, ii. 69–71, 115–119.

On the same day on which he wrote the statement above mentioned, Lechford made a letter of attorney to Thomas Savage to receive all moneys due him in New England, and all letters which should be sent to him, "and the same letters to peruse and send and return them and the said moneys and debts to him in money or goods and commodities," etc.[2]

The last entry in the Note-book before leaving Boston was made on or after July 29. It is a memorandum of his obligation by bond (in which Mr. David Offley was his surety) to Mr. Joshua Hewes of Roxbury, to pay £8 to "Mr. Joshua Foote at the Cocke in Grace church Streete," before Christmas, on a bill or note dated July 27.

On the opposite page are two unimportant entries of payments of money in England in the discharge of commissions intrusted to him before sailing. At the head of this page is the date, "Post Mich[aelmas], 17 Car. 1641."

The vessel in which he took passage from Boston sailed on the third of August. We learn from Winthrop (ii. 31) that among her forty passengers were John Winthrop, Jr., Hugh Peters, Thomas Welde, and William Hibbins, who, "finding no ship which was to return right for England, they went to Newfoundland, intending to get a passage from thence in the fishing fleet. . . . They arrived there in 14 days, but could not go altogether, so were forced to divide themselves, and go from several parts of the island, as they could get shipping." Lechford mentions having "touched, coming homeward," at Newfoundland.[3] On the 16th of November he was once more an inmate of Clement's Inn, and had "returned humbly to the Church of England." [4]

LECHFORD'S

MANUSCRIPT NOTE-BOOK.

Boston in New England 27°. 4^{i}. the day of my landing, 1638.

John Jolliffe[1] and William Chesebrough[2] made a grant of the house & lot next M^{r} Cottons in nature of a mortgage for 45^{l} to 4 Yorkshire men and their heires. [1s. Jolliffe & Chesebrough &c.]

[1] John Jolliffe, or Joyliffe, is noted by Savage as of Boston, 1656, freeman, 1673; many years a selectman; one of the Patriots of 1689 who put Andros in prison; town-recorder in 1691; made by Increase Mather one of the council in the charter of William and Mary; died 23 Nov. 1702. (Savage is here in error. He died in 1701.) In the letters of Matthew Cradock to Winthrop (4 Mass. Hist. Coll., vi. 118 et seqq.) is found frequent mention of John Jolliffe, agent for Cradock in New England. This must be the man noted in the text. Whether it is the same one who is found in Savage is doubtful. If he were Cradock's agent in 1636, he must have been near ninety at the time of his death. Looking along in Sewall's Diary (5 Mass. Hist. Coll., v. and vi.) we find with other notice that in 1789 Joyliffe, then on the Bench, was old enough to be Sewall's father. Sewall was then thirty-seven. In 1692 Joyliffe resigned the Recordership on account of blindness, and in 1701 he died, having "been blind, and having laboured under many Infirmities for a long time." These notices would seem to show that he might have been born as early as 1610, which would make him twenty-six at the time of his employment by Cradock, if he were that agent. There is, therefore, some doubt as to the identity.

[2] William Chesebrough was about removing from Boston, — or perhaps had already removed to Mount Wollaston (Braintree, now Quincy). A few years afterwards he again removed to Rehoboth; and thence, before 1649, to the Pequot country, where he was the first permanent settler in the territory now constituting the township of Stonington, Conn. (Trumbull, i. 234).

The "4 Yorkshire men" were probably of the company of the Rev. Ezekiel Rogers, "who came over with him this summer" from Rowley, in Yorkshire (Winth., i. 278); and may have been fellow-passengers with Lechford.

Thomas Barker removed to Rowley, where he died, 1650; and his widow became the third wife of Mr. Rogers. Francis Lambert also followed Mr. Rogers to Rowley. John Punderson and John Johnson had removed to New Haven before the date of the conveyance of 1639, where the former was chosen one of the seven pillars, at the first church gathering, August, 1639. Later reference is made to him, pp. 178, 195, 207, post. See also Mass. Records, i. 267, 313. Sellanova, or De Sallenoba (or Scilla Nova, as Governor Winthrop once wrote it, in 1636), who was an engineer, had perhaps been employed in the construction of the mill or dam. [T.] He is mentioned in the Mass. Records as being sent for in a proposed expedition against the French at Penobscot (i. 160).

[2] John Tinker, at this time of Boston, was about making a voyage to England. He returned before March, 1643, and was, successively, of Windsor, Boston, Lancaster, and New London. He was a representative from the last-named town in 1660 and 1661, and appointed an assistant, or magistrate, there. He died in October, 1662. See later in the Note-book, p. 189, post. [T.]

[3] John Davenport, the first minister of New Haven; born at Coventry, England, 1598, died 1670, in Boston, where he succeeded John Wilson in the ministry of the First Church. He first arrived in Boston with Hopkins and Eaton, June 26, 1637, and remained there until March 30, 1638, when he sailed for Quinpiack. It would appear that he had left his MSS. in Boston, to be forwarded to England. Winthrop, under October, 1638, writes: "About two years since one Mr. [Richard] Bernard, a minister at Batcomb, in Somersetshire, in England, sent over two books in writing, one to the magistrates, and the other to the elders, wherein he laid down arguments against the manner of our gathering our churches, etc., which the elders could not answer till this

Mr. Cotton's Modest and cleer Answer to Mr. Ball's Discourse of Set Formes of Prayer was published in London in 1642 (4to, 49 pp.). In a note to the Reply to the Answers to the Nine Positions (London, 1643, p. 7), Mr. Ball mentions "having received that answer before the publishing of his own Treatise." From Lechford's note it would appear that Mr. Davenport also wrote in reply to Ball. The other manuscript transcribed by Lechford was doubtless An Apologie of the Elders of the several Churches in New England for Church Covenant, sent over in answer to Master Bernard in the year 1639; with An Answer to Nine Positions about Church Government, first published in England in 1641, and reprinted in 1643, with Richard Mather's Answer to Thirty-two Questions, etc. Mr. Ball wrote a Reply to the Answers to the Nine Positions, which was printed in 1643, A Letter of Many Ministers in old England, Requesting the judgement of their Reverend Brethren in New England concerning Nine Positions, Written Anno Dom. 1637. Together with their Answer thereunto returned, Anno 1639. And the Reply made unto the said Answer, and sent over unto them, Anno 1640 (London, 4to, pp. 12, 90). Perhaps a successful "search for his wife's lands" encouraged him to return to England. See p. 26, note, post. [T.]

It is hereby covenanted concluded declared and agreed by and betweene the partyes abovesaid in manner and forme following 1. Imprimis that whereas the said Augustin Clement and Elizabeth his wife have by their deed indented under their hands & seales bearing date with these presents granted and conveyed unto the said John Tinker. over with him in 1630. Williams had been banished by the General Court in the winter of 1635–1636, and Throgmorton had accompanied him to Rhode Island. The entry is crossed out, perhaps at the return of the books.

[1] Augustin Clement came to New England in the "James," of London, April, 1635, and in the list is called a painter, sometime of Reading; (3 Mass. Hist. Coll., viii. 319; cf. Hist. and Geneal. Reg., v. 440). Savage thinks it probable that he went home in 1636, and came again in May, 1637. He died at Dorchester, Oct. 1, 1674. From these articles of agreement, and the letters which follow, it appears that he had a house and land at Wokingham (or Oakingham), a market-town in Berkshire, seven miles from Reading, which was then occupied by his sister, Margaret Mathew, who was proposing to come to New England; and that Anne Clement, the widow of his brother John, was living at Shenfield [county of Essex, about ten miles from Chelmsford, on the road to London]. Lechford, in his Plaine Dealing, mentions his "old acquaintance, Master Frost, sometime of Nottingham, and his sonnes, John Grey and Henry Grey" (3 Mass. Hist. Coll., iii. 98).

The initial letters, which Lechford gives, leave wide scope for conjecture as to the names of his correspondents. Sir G. G. was, possibly, Sir Gilbert Gerard, deputy-governor of the Company of Providence Island (Bahamas), from which company Lechford elsewhere mentions that he had received the offer of an advantageous position. [1] William Dinely is perhaps remembered by most people rather through his son, Fathergone Dinely, than in his own personality. He was a barber-surgeon, and combined with this vocation the art of drawing teeth, as was then customary. He was a favorer of the heretical doctrines advanced by Mrs. Anne Hutchinson, and on account of his peculiar calling had a very great opportunity to instill these doctrines into the minds of his patients. But being sent for on a winter's night by one of Roxbury (as may be read in Johnson's Wonder-Working Providence, Book II. chap. xv.) to draw a tooth, he went forth with the maid who had summoned him, and there being a violent snow-storm, they both lost their way on going over the Neck, and died in the snow. His son, born shortly after this event, was baptized with the name of Fathergone. His widow subsequently married Richard Critchley; for whom see note at p. 143, post.

[2] John Newgate, hatter, of Boston, had been a London merchant but came to New England in 1632. He was a man of influence, once a representative, and many times selectman.

[3] This will, made in contemplation of a voyage to England, gives the names and order of his children more fully than his last will, made twenty-seven years later, which is printed in the Hist. and Geneal. Reg., xiii. 333–335. His eldest son, John, and third son, Joseph [Joshua?], are not named in the last will, and both died probably before their father. But my will is that my wife Anne Newgate shall have the rents, profits and revenues of the said Lands & Tenements untill my said sonne shall attaine the age of Twenty and foure yeares, for and towards the educating and bringing up of him and the rest of my Children, And also that my said sonne shall pay out of the said Lands ffifty pounds unto my daughter Sarah and ffifty pounds more unto my daughter Hannah, at her age of twenty one yeares or daye of marriage, w^{ch} it shall please God to be first, for w^{ch} payments to be made unto them when my said sonne shall come to his age of Twenty foure yeares hee shall either pay the same or give bond to my said daughters for payment thereof as soone as he can make sale of the said Lands and Tenements or by any meanes raise the moneys out of the same. But, if he the said John Newgate my sonne [9] shall refuse to give such bond and to make the said paym^{ts}, then the said lands shall be sold by my Executors and only one hundred and ffifty pounds shall be payd unto my said Sonne, and the rest of the money that it shall be sold for shall be equally divided betweene my other children and my wife. And yet if my said sonne shall be stubborne and rebellious against God or his Church or his mother and will not be reclaymed, then he shall have but thirty pounds of the said money & the rest to be divided as aforesaid. Itm̄, I give unto my sonne Nathanael Newgate my house in Boston aforesaid wherin I now dwell, wth that little ground belonges to it, to enter upon the same & enjoy it to him and his heires for ever when he shall accomplish the age of twenty foure yeares.

And to my sonne Joseph Newgate, I give and bequeath those my house & grounds in the country called Rumney Marsh[1] in N. Their mother shall have the use & profitt of these last mentioned houses in Boston and at Rumney Marsh untill their said respective ages, for and towards their education. But if their mother dye before either of those times, then the same shall presently be in the hands of my said sonnes Nathanael & Joseph respectively according to my true meaning herein expressed. Itm̃, I give and bequeath unto my daughter Elizabeth Oliver tenne pounds w^ch^ my wife shall pay in money or moneys worth wthin twelve months after my decease. [1] This indenture supplies some additional information, respecting the family of Mrs. Coytmore, to that which has been gathered by Mr. Frothingham (History of Charlestown, p. 86) and Mr. Savage, showing that she was the daughter of Robert Myles, of Sutton, County Suffolk, and had by her first husband, Thomas Grey, of Harwich, County Essex, three daughters: Parnell (married Increase Nowell), Katherine (married Thomas Graves), and Susanna (married — Eaglesfield), who died before the making of this indenture, leaving one daughter, Mary Eaglesfield. [T.] It is probably superfluous to remark that this Mrs. Coytmore was not, at a later period, Governor Winthrop's wife, but his wife's mother-in-law.

[1] Thomas Paynter of Boston left traces throughout New England, — at Providence, where he had a lot of land, at Hingham (1637), then at Charlestown, New Haven, Rowley, and Hingham again (before 1643, says Savage; but under this date, 1638, he calls himself of Boston). In Hingham he got into trouble for his religious views, and moved thence to Providence, then to Newport, and lastly, in 1661, to Westerly, with the first settlers of that town. He had a house in Boston (down in the Book of Possessions, G, 26), near Dock Square. George Barrell in the Book of Possessions is given a lot directly north of Paynter's; from which I infer that Paynter retained some of his property. It was on the purchase of this property by Barrell that he was admitted a townsman, on condition of "inoffensive carryage" (Boston Town Records, p. 36).

To all to whome these presents shall come, I John Wintrop Esq^{r} Governor of the Massachusetts in New England send greeting in our Lord God everlasting, Knowe yee that Elizabeth Woolcott and Mary Woolcott, Daughters of John Woolcott[3] heretofore of Glaston in the County of Somerset,

[1] This provision for one of the daughters of John Graves may account for the omission of her name in his will, made Nov. 1, 1644, by which his estate was left to his wife, mother, and children, except Sarah. Perhaps she was the only surviving child by a second wife (daughter of Thomas Finch), who died shortly after his arrival in New England in May, 1633, or of Judith Alward, or Allard, whom he married in December, 1635, his third wife (compare Savage; see Roxbury Land Records, p. 81). [T.]

[2] Nicholas Parker, of whom much will be seen from time to time in the Note-book, had been a merchant of Roxbury, where he lived at first, but soon removed to Boston. He was probably brother of Richard Parker, who also appears frequently in the Note-book; but I believe there is no direct evidence to show that this was the case.

[3] "John Wolcott, Cambridge or Watertown, freeman, 4th March, 1635; representative, May following; died in July, 1638. His inventory, taken 17th of that month by three of the church members, — Rev. George Philips being one, — and the prefix of respect, show that he was a man of esteem" (Savage). His first wife died probably before his coming to New England. He left a widow, Winifred, who afterwards married Thomas Allen, of Barnstable (Bond's Watertown, p. 668. On p. 975 Bond refers to a notice of John Wolcott in History of Brookfield, pp. 37, 38). The memorandum to "write to Henry Wolcott, of Windsor," to inform him of the choice of guardians by the daughters, indicates the relationship of John Wolcott to the Windsor family. The elder daughter bore the same name with the wife of Henry Wolcott, Elizabeth [Saunders]. May not John have been the eldest

And that in the meanewhile they their said uncles would for them and in their names do or cause to be done all such suit & service to the Court or Courts of the Lord or Lords of the premises, and all other things, as shall be requisite according to the Law and custome or customes of the Mannor or Mannors where the said lands & tenements doe lye, for the better obteyning, holding and enjoying the premises accordingly. In witnesse whereof I have hereunto set my hand and the publique seale of our Colony. son of Henry and Elizabeth, born in 1607, who did not accompany his parents to New England, but was living in Wellington, Somersetshire, in 1631? In a notice of "Henry Wolcott and his Children" in the Congregational Quarterly for April, 1859 (vol. i. p. 149), the writer, Rev. Samuel Wolcott, says that the eldest son, John, "apparently never emigrated to America. He had died without issue previous to the date of his father's will, in 1655. The family record makes no mention of him." These daughters of John Wolcott, of Watertown, probably returned to England to the care of their guardians, — which, on the supposition of the identity of the father with the son of Henry, would account for the disappearance of their names from the family record. (This is not noticed in the recently published Wolcott Family Memoirs, 1881.) [T.]

[1] This conveyance was probably made, or designed to be made (for the omission of the names of witnesses, and of the usual articles of agreement creating the trust, make it doubtful if it was ever executed), in trust, to enable Mr. Strange to sell and give conveyance of the premises to a purchaser in England. It offers an important contribution to the Cade (Cady) genealogy. James Cade, of Hingham, 1635, "came, it is said, from Wales, or the West of England, which," as Mr. Savage thought, "is very loose." This draught shows him to have come from Northam, County Devon, where his father, Christopher Cade, had held land, which he sold, charged with an annuity to his wife Margaret, and died before the date of this instrument, leaving sons, James and John, and probably a daughter, Thomasine, wife of John Roe. Mr. Savage says that he "came over, 1637;" but Lechford's reference to a discussion "on shipboard" (though subsequently crossed out) seems to show that they arrived in New England by the same vessel, June 27, 1638, which Lechford notes as "the day of his landing." [Letter from Thomas Lechford to Hugh Peters[1];]

Worthy Mr. Peters. My service remembered to you, these are to let you (as a friend in the Lord, upon whom my heart much did and doth depend for counsel and ayde,) vnderstand some of my affaires; wherein I presume upon [blank][2] and your wisdom and gracious disposition which I have ever observed in you since I was your auditor and hung upon your Ministry at the Graves or Sepulchres.[3] You may easily conceive how it is with me, touching my estate or livelihood, being thrown out of my station in England, and [desirous to [1] Hugh Peters, born 1599, came to New England in the "Abigail," as it is thought, in 1635, was settled the fourth minister of Salem, Dec. 21, 1636. He went back to England, in the same ship with Lechford, in 1641, and engaged vigorously in the Civil War. He was executed at the return of Charles II., Oct. 16, 1660. This letter is deciphered from the short-hand copy in the Note-book (see Introduction to Plaine Dealing, pp. xiv and xvii).

My strength is but small and my judgement young and slender in great affaires of State. I showed you my books: you had not leisure to peruse them. I likewise, long before, showed my maine book to Mr. Cotton. He had not leisure to read it; and the first draught of that Of Prophesie, it lay in his house at least five weekes: After the Court here ended, I delivered that Of Prophesie to Mr. Deputy [Thomas Dudley][3] to advise thereof as a private

[1] George Rákoczy (or Ragotzki), born 1591, was elected Prince of Transylvania (Siebenbürgen) in 1631, about two years after the death of Bethlen Gabor, whose daughter he had married. He was a zealous champion of the Protestants of Hungary and Bohemia, who had suffered bitter persecution under the reign of Ferdinand II. and his successor (1637), Ferdinand III. The Bohemians had elected as their prince Frederick of the Pfalz, son-in-law of James I. of England, with whom Bethlen and his successor, George Rákoczy, maintained a firm alliance. The latter, having established himself in his principality by the defeat of the Turks at the battle of Schalonta in 1636, prosecuted the war against Ferdinand II. and the Roman Catholic party, until the rights of the Protestants were for a time secured by the treaty of peace of Lintz in 1645. He died Oct. 14, 1648 (Zedler's Lexicon, art. "Ragoczy, George;" Moreri; Encyc. Brit., art. "Hungary"). [T.]

friend, as a godly man and a member of the Church, whether it were fit to be published. The next news I had was, that at first dash he accused me of heresy and wrote to Mr. Governor [Winthrop] that my book was fitter to be burned. Wot you what that heresy was? Why a thing I never intended, neither did you see when you read it; that I said the Apostles of churches had not power of to command, and I thought the Apostles of Christ claimed no other power than according to the word and will of Christ; therefore, (say he and some other,) I implied the Apostles of Christ might erre: and indeed my words might have been so strained. But the truth is, Apostles ought to remaine in the Churches, likewise Evangelists and Prophets, as well as Pastors or Teachers, else we must be beholden to the sins of men for the propagation of the Gospell: we must stay at home till they persecute us abroad, and then we may preach the Gospell. Not that I hold myself (the Lord knows my heart and my insufficiency!) fit for any of these great workes. Likewise, Prophesie is as I have said, as I verily believe; and also Tongues ought to be learned and spoken, as I have proposed. I speake according to my light, and dare do no otherwise. If hotly pursued me Master Deputy, I impute it to his zeale against errors: I am not angrie with him for it: but when I saw seven shepherds and eight principall men called out against me, as if I were an Assyrian,[1] I thought there might be something in me to bee reproved, and that it concerned mee to looke about mee. I dealt plainely: I told that I held, and so doe from my heart, the Apostles neither did nor could erre, because infallibly inspired by the Holy Ghost. Thereupon my book was referred to the consideration of the Elders. Having intimated a word of my other maine taske to Mr. Deputy, they all now press me to produce that: I told them it was not ready for theire view; I must faire write it, and alter some things; yet at length, upon promise that I should have it againe (for if it be no error, I will not part with it for £100.) I promised to let them see it. I have accordingly left it to Mr. Deputy and the Governor (who also desired to see it). Now the reason I open these things to you so, is this: First, that if you heare of some of these things, you may from me understand the truth itselfe: Secondly, that I may not be judged upon [imperfections?] in my writings, by your ayde and counsell to the contrary: Thirdly, that the assembly of the Elders may be full when you undertake to sifte the maine matters; and that you shall be one, Mr. Warde[1] another, and Mr. Parker of Newbury; and that Mr. Norton and Mr. Phillips may likewise be called, for it will concerne you all. The maine question will be, whether the hierarchy of Rome, or papacie, although antichristian, be that Man of Sin [etc.]? I meane the maine that will trouble either mee or the churches: the other things I confesse are also of great consequence, but they all concerne the day of Judgment and things [after?] in the great and excellent Kingdom of our Lord: and I wrote you this letter (because of some receipt of injury that hereof is) to let you know that I appeal to all the teaching Elders of the Churches within this Jurisdiction, et vos omnes testor per nomen carissimum Domini nostri Jesu Christi, that you soundly and maturely would advise and consult of the matter; and regard with all lawfull favour

Your unworthy servant,

THOMAS LECHFORD.

BOSTON, 3. 11? 1638.

[31] Let all men knowe by these presents that whereas I Richard Walker[2] of Lynne in New E., planter, upon the special instance and request of [blank] Howes,[3] late of Lynne aforesd and now of Mattachees, pltr, became suerity for him for a certaine debt of his lately owing unto one Samuel Smith,

[1] These are evidently Nathaniel Ward and John Norton, of Ipswich, Thomas Parker, of Newbury, and George Phillips, of Watertown.

[2] Richard Walker, of Lynne, thought to have come in 1630, was an officer in the militia, so called, and a representative for Lynn in the General Court for some years, and then afterwards for Reading, whither he removed about 1650; he returned, however, to Lynn, where he died, very aged, in 1687.

[3] Two of the name, Samuel and Thomas Howes, were at Yarmouth (Mattachees, or Mattakeese) in 1638. [T.]

the said Howes promising and undertaking to save me harmelesse of the sayd suertiship and all Dammages that should arise and come upon me by reason of the same, and the said Samuel Smith presented his accõn for the said Debt against both me and the said Howes, before the Governor Councell and Assistants of the Jurisdiccõn of the Massachusetts in New E. in the Court there holden before them, the fourth day of the tenth moneth of this present yeare and therupon recovered against me and the said Howes the summe of thirty bushells of corne and tenne shillings for costs of suit in discharge whereof I was compelled to pay the summe of nyne pounds and tenne shillings, the said Howes not having payd any parte thereof, and also I have ben put to other charges in travell & expences hereabout, to the summe of twelve shillings. Now I the said Richard Walker doe hereby authorize and appoint my welbeloved freind Edward Dillingham of Sandwich in N. E. gent, my true & lawfull Attorney to sue the said [blank] Howes for me & in my name upon this my accõn of trespas upon the case, and my Dammages thereupon to recover of and against him the said [blank] Howes, to my use, before the Governor and Court of the Jurisdiccõn of New Plimouth or elsewhere, Witnesse my hand and seale hereunto set, the Twenty nynth day of the eleventh moneth, Anno Dñi 1638. In p^{r}ncia mei T. L. [1*s.*]

This Indenture made the last Day of February, in the foureteenth yeare of the raigne of our Soveraigne Lord Charles by the grace of God King of England &c. Annoq̃ Dm̃i 1638, Betweene Samuel Cole of Boston in New England, Inholder, of the one parte, and Captaine Robert Sedgwicke[1] of Charlestowne in New England aforesaid, of the other parte, Witnesseth, that the said Samuel Cole[2] for and in consideration of

[1] Robert Sedgwick, a man of great consequence, came in 1635 to Charlestown; died in Jamaica, 1656. He was a prominent military man, captain of the artillery company in 1640, commander of the Castle the next year, and afterwards major-general of the Colony.

[2] "Samuel Cole set up the first house for common entertainment" in Boston in 1633 or 1634 (Winth., i. 124–125). He was licensed by the General Court, September, 1635, under the Act for the Regulation of Ordinaries passed the year previous (Mass. Records, i. 159);

the summe of two hundred pounds of lawfull money of England to him in hand satisfied & payd by the said Captaine Sedgwicke, before the sealing and delivery hereof, whereof and and his was the principal, if not the only, inn of Boston until September, 1638, when, as appears by this conveyance, and the articles of agreement which follow, he sold it to Captain Robert Sedgwick. The position of the inn has always been supposed to have been "on the west side of Merchants' Row, midway from State Street to Faneuil Hall" (Whitman's Hist. Ancient and Hon. Artillery Co., 2d ed., p. 45; see also Drake's Boston, pp. 232, 240, and Memorial History of Boston, vol. ii. p. xx.). It seems, however, from this deed that its position was immediately to the north of Edward Hutchinson's estate, whereon the Old Corner Bookstore now stands. The grounds for this opinion are as follows: Cole kept an inn and sold beer and wine, suffering various fines and punishments, until March 12, 1638, when he received leave to sell his house for an inn. This deed in the text is dated the last day of February, 1638; there is nothing to show that it was immediately executed. The last mention of Cole as an innkeeper is May 2, 1638. In 1642, "whereas Capt. Sedgwick hath before this time set up a brew-house at his great charge, & very commodious for this part of the country, he is freely licenced to brew beer to sell," etc. (Mass. Records, i. 214). Thus it would seem that Sedgwick, having purchased the inn, took up the business of innkeeping as Cole dropped it. It seems that the business was carried on upon the spot named above rather than by the waterside, from the fact that Sedgwick is given this piece of ground alone in the Book of Possessions, and that although the land in the text is not accurately described, the idea to be got therefrom is that it was to the north of Mr. Hutchinson's estate. That Cole kept his inn on this spot seems clear from the fact that he is said in the deed to have lately dwelled there, and also from his having at this time no other land (known to us), except perhaps a piece which he sold in 1645 to George Halsall, a blacksmith and ferryman, who had no license to sell beer or keep an inn; from which it would seem that none had been kept there.

[For this reasoning I am indebted to Mr. George Lamb, who was kind enough, upon my application, to look up all the property held by Cole and by Sedgwick, and to send me his opinion upon the subject. — E. E. H., Jr.]

In June, 1637, the young Lord Ley, son of the Earl of Marlborough, arriving at Boston when Governor Winthrop was absent, "took up his lodging at the common inn;" and afterwards declined the Governor's invitation to become his guest, "saying, that he came not to be troublesome to any, and the house where he was, was so well governed that he could be as private there as elsewhere" (Winth., i. 230). A few months afterwards (Nov. 15, 1637) Mr. Cole "being convented for having had much disorder in his house, selling wine contrary to order, and beare above the price ordered," was fined £30 (Mass. Records, i. 208). At the same Court his name appears among those of "Boston men to be disarmed" for their sympathy with Mr. Wheelwright and Mrs. Hutchinson. In March, 1638, his fine was "respited till the next Court, and hee hath liberty to sell his house, for an inne" (Ibid., p. 226). And after he had effected the sale, his fine was again remitted, wherewith the said Samuell Doth acknowledge himselfe satisfied & paid, and thereof and of every parte thereof doth acquite, release & forever discharge the said Captaine and finally "discounted," by a grant of £10, in November, 1639 (Ibid., pp. 245, 279). Subsequently Mr. Cole lived at Rumney Marsh (Chelsea), where he had a "great allotment" of land, laid out in 1637. He was one of the constables of Boston in 1648; selectman, 1653, and for several years after (Drake's Boston, pp. 235, 312, 333, etc.).

It appears by this conveyance and the accompanying articles of agreement, that in September, 1638, or shortly before, he was living in the south half of a new house, adjoining the old (which was yet standing), the north part of which was sold to Thomas Marryott (or Marrett) and others; and that Mr. William Hutchinson and his wife were his next-door neighbors until the removal of Mr. Hutchinson to Rhode Island.

Whether Captain Sedgwick occupied for a time the house purchased of Mr. Cole, or let it to some other person as an ordinary, does not appear. In November, 1637, he had "set up a brew house," and was licensed by the Court to brew and sell beer (Mass. Records, i. 214). In November, 1639, he "was admonished to take heede of oppression" (Ibid., p. 279), but of what kind, the record does not inform us. A few months later (April 30, 1640) William Hudson — having been chosen by the town of Boston to keep an ordinary — was allowed by the Particular Court, and by the General Court in May following (Ibid., pp. 287, 290).

Josselyn says: "In 1637 there were not many houses in the Town of Boston, amongst which were two houses of entertainment, called Ordinaries" (Second Voyage, p. 173; 3 Mass. Hist. Coll., iii. 337). Mr. Drake thought that "if Josselyn meant that there were two inns in 1637, he probably included the one in Charlestown," as there is nothing in the records to show that there was more than one in Boston (Hist. of Boston, p. 240, note). But it is certain that William Baulston (or Balstone) was "licensed to keepe a house of intertainment and . . . to sell such claret and white wine as is sent for," in June, 1637 (Mass. Records, i. 199). Balstone, like Samuel Cole, was an adherent of Mrs. Hutchinson; like Cole, he was fined — probably for "disorder in his house" — in November, 1637, and disarmed, with other Boston Antinomians, the same month; having been previously fined and disfranchised for signing the petition in favor of Mr. Wheelwright. The following March he was licensed to depart the jurisdiction of Massachusetts (with Coddington, Coggeshall, and others), and not long afterwards removed to Portsmouth, R. I. (Mass. Records, i. 207, 208, 212, 223; Savage, Geneal. Dict., s. n.). In August, 1638, the town of Boston authorized Mr. Thomas Cornnell to "buy brother Willyam Balstone's house, and to become an inhabitant" (Town Records, p. 35); and in September the General Court licensed Cornnell, or Cornhill [or as Lechford once writes the name, farther on, Cornish], "to keepe an inn, in the roome of William Baulston" (Mass. Records, i. 238). Cornhill was not more fortunate than were his predecessors in retaining the favor of the Court. In June, 1639, after having been fined "for several offences," he was "alowed

[34] This indenture made the sixteenth day of March, Anno Dñi 1638, Betweene Richard Evered[2] of Dedham in New England, Pharier, of the one parte, and Thomas Nelson[3] of Boston in New England, gent, of the other parte, Witnesseth, that the said Richard Evered for the sum̄e of tenne pounds to him in hand payd by the said Thomas Nelson, whereof the

[1] This was probably Steven Greensmith, who had incurred the displeasure of the Court in March, 1637, "for affirming that all the ministers (except Mr. Cotton, Mr. Wheelright, and hee thought Mr. Hooker) did teach a covenant of works." For this he was fined £40, and required to give satisfaction to the ministers and the churches. In August following he was committed for non-payment of his fine (Mass. Records, i. 189, 196, 200; Winth., i. 234). In September, 1636, Mr. Cole was fined for the breach of a town order, in selling a lot to Mr. Greenfield [Greensmith] without consent of authority; and soon after "Mr. Greensmyth" is named as the proprietor of land near Mr. Cole's ground at Rumney Marsh (Drake's Boston, pp. 194, 195). [T.]

[2] Mr. Savage says this name "is uniformly given Everard." The name of Ezekiel Rogers, as a witness to this mortgage, suggests the possible affinity of this Richard Everard to "Sarah, daughter of John Everard, citizen of London," who became the second wife of the Rev. Daniel Rogers, of Wethersfield, Essex county, son and successor of the Rev. Richard Rogers, and elder brother of the Rev. Ezekiel Rogers (Candler Manuscript, corrected reading by Colonel J. L. Chester, in Proc. Mass. Hist. Soc., 1860–1862, p. 496). This instrument shows Everard to have been a proprietor and householder at Cambridge, if not an inhabitant, before his settlement at the new plantation of Dedham. [T.]

[3] Thomas Nelson came, probably with the Rev. Ezekiel Rogers [witness to this indenture], in the summer of 1638, and was living at Boston until the establishment of the Rowley Company in their new plantation (see p. 1, ante, note). In his will of Aug. 6, 1648, he names as his executors his "uncle, Richard Dummer," and Governor Bellingham (Hist. and Geneal. Reg., iii. 267). He married Joanna, daughter of Thomas Dummer, of Salisbury, and niece of Richard (Savage). [T.]

said Richard Everard doth hereby acknowledge the receipt and that he is thereof and therewith satisfied hath granted, bargained & sold and by these presents doth grant bargaine & sell unto the said Thomas Nelson All that his house and lott lying in Cambridge in New England and six acres of arrable land thereto adjoyning, and five acres of medowe thereto belonging, wth the appurtenances, To have and to hold the premises with all and singulare the appurtenances unto the said Thomas Nelson his heires and assignes for ever to the only use and proper behoof of him the said Thomas Nelson his heires and assignes for ever. And the said Richard Evered doth hereby covenant, promise & grant to and wth the said Thomas Nelson his heires and assignes by these presents that they shall or may lawfully quietly hold the premises freed of all incumbrances whatsoever notwithstanding any thing done or to be done by him the said Richard Evered his heires executors administrators or assignes. Provided always that if the said Richard Evered his heires or executors shall truly pay or cause to be payd unto the said Thomas Nelson, his heires or assignes, the summe of tenne pounds, at the house of Richard Bellingham Esq^{r} in Boston aforesaid, upon the thirtieth day of September next ensuing the date hereof, then this grant bargaine & sale shall be voyd. In witnesse &c. Ez. Rogers, Jacobi Luxford, & mei. [3*s.*]

To all to whome these presents shall come greeting, Whereas I Richard Iles[1] of Charlestowne in New England, Carpenter, did heretofore reteyne one servant named Ambrose

[1] His name is here written as it appears in the record of his will, on the first page of the Suffolk Probate Records, vol. i. (Hist. and Geneal. Reg., ii. 102, 186). Mr. T. W. Harris, in notes on this will (Ibid., p. 218), said that Richard Hills, "incorrectly written Iles" was a cooper; admitted an inhabitant of Charlestown in 1638; and that he was probably a younger brother of Mr. Joseph Hills, who became an inhabitant at the same time. Mr. Savage, with accustomed caution, notices this Richard under the several surnames of "Iles or Hills," "Hill or Hills," and "Eells, Ells, Eels, or Eales;" but finds "much plausibility" in the argument for Hills (Geneal. Dict., ii. 105, 419). Elsewhere Lechford writes, "John Iles of Dorchester," whose name usually appears as Hills, or Hill (p. 90, post). But he writes "Joseph Hills of Charlestown," as in deposition, July 30, 1639 (p. 91, post). [T.]

To all Christian people unto whome these presents shall come, I Nicholas Parker of Boston[2] in New England, yeoman,

[1] Thomas Yow is named as a landholder in Boston in 1648 (Book of Possessions, p. 45); and I have not met with the name earlier, on this side of the Atlantic, except in this instrument, and in a mortgage by Allen Yewe, of Boston, mariner, executed in 1640 (and copied on a subsequent page from Lechford). Mr. Savage gives Yow, Yeow, and Yew as varieties of the surname Yeo; and Father Druillettes, in the Journal of his embassy to New England, in 1650, supplies yet another, in his mention of "Thomas Yau, master of a vessel clearing [from Boston] for the Kenebec," to whom the Father was "very particularly commended" by "Sieur Guebin," [Major Gibbons] (Coll. N. Y. Hist. Soc., 2d ser., iii. 315, 316). [T.]

"Walter Blackburne, of Boston, 1640, had perhaps lived at Roxbury" (Savage, in Geneal. Dict.). He sold his house and land in Roxbury to William Cheney, Sept. 30, 1639, describing himself in the deed as "late of Roxbury." In 1640 or 1641 he returned to England (*Suff. [1] Isaac Allerton, formerly of Plymouth, came in the "Mayflower," and was one of the signers (the fifth in order) of the Cape Cod Compact. He was Assistant at Plymouth for some time, and at this period of his life was one of the richest of the Pilgrims. Subsequently his affairs became disturbed. He was embarrassed, for instance, by the loss of a trading wigwam at Machias in 1633; "by the wreck of his pinnace from Port Royal in 1634; and still further impoverished by the loss of his bark at Cape Ann, in 1635" (3 Mass. Hist. Coll., vii. 241). In 1634 he is mentioned in the Massachusetts Colonial Records in regard to a debt of his for £100. In Lechford he is twice mentioned as being sued for debt. His fishing operations at Marblehead were not very successful (see 3 Mass. Hist. Coll., vii. 249, and Mass. Records, i. 140). He had relations with Virginia, naturally enough, and also with "New Holland," as here appears (see also p. 151, footnote); but lived towards the end of his life at New Haven, where he died in debt, 1659.

[2] William Coddington, formerly of Boston, at this time of Aquidneck.

tleman, send greeting in our Lord God everlasting, Knowe yee that I for and in consideration of the summe of one thousand and three hundred pounds of lawfull money of England, to me in hand satisfyed and pay'd before the sealing and delivery hereof by William Tynge[1] of Boston in New England, merchant, Doe by these presents grant [37] bargaine and sell unto the said William Tynge, all that my Dwelling house situate in Boston aforesaid adjoyning to the house of Richard Bellingham Esq^{r}, wth the garden and the orchard, and a certaine parcell of land, meadow or pasture, thereto adjoyning & belonging, and all outhouses, yardes, wayes & easements thereunto belonging, And all my land in the Forte Field in Boston-necke, and all my right in Spectacle Island,[2] and my ffarme house at Mount Wollaston and all outhouses, barnes, stables, yards, gardens and orchards thereto belonging, as well on the one syde as on the other of Mount Wollaston river there and two acres of ground be it more or lesse allready marked out neare adjoyning to the barne on the Chosen assistant, in 1630, in England. He was Treasurer of the Colony from 1633 to 1636, and was then left out of office on account of his religious opinions, and early in 1638 went to Rhode Island, where he was first made judge of the settlement at Portsmouth; but shortly being driven thence with his supporters by some faction, he removed with them and settled at Newport. The people at Portsmouth desiring to unite again, Coddington was chosen the first governor of the Colony in 1640. He was again chosen in 1678, and died in the same year. Articles upon him are printed in the Hist. & Geneal. Reg. for January, 1874, p. 13, and for April, 1882, p. 138.

As for this land at Mount Wollaston, the reader may gain some additional knowledge thereon by comparing this deed with a purchase made by William Tyng, of the Hutchinsons, who owned land just beyond "Mr. Coddington's farm and Mr. Wilson's" (Boston Town Records, i. 7), note of which may be found pp. 212, 214, post, as well as by referring to the Records, as above. The bounds are so vague that it is hardly possible to place the lots with any accuracy; but a general idea of their position may be obtained. The land here spoken of as belonging to Judith Quinsey is, in the references made, called land of Edward [Edmund] Quinsey, her husband.

[1] William Tyng was a prominent Boston merchant. He arrived in New England about a week after Lechford, in his own ship. He became one of the first men of the town, frequently its representative in the General Court. In his later days he moved to Braintree, wherein may be seen, throughout the Note-book, he had many dealings in lands. He died Jan. 18, 1652.

[1] Richard Collacot was a prominent man in Dorchester, of whom the reader will find frequent mention in the latter pages of the Note-book. He had been a sergeant in the Pequot war, just finished, and held also at various times the offices of selectman and of representative.

[2] Mr. Robert Keayne was a public-spirited and prominent merchant at this time. His house and garden were on the south side of the market-place, where the Old State House afterwards stood (Book of Possessions, p. 102). He was one of the charter members of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company, and, indeed, is usually spoken of as Captain Robert Keayne. His name constantly occurs in the Colonial and Boston Town Records, as well as in the Note-book.

[3] Deborah, Lady Moody, most probably, who removed from Lynn to Long Island about 1643. Winthrop's earliest mention of her, as "a wise and anciently religious woman," is under date of June, 1643 (vol. ii. p. 123). The Colony had granted her, three years before, four hundred acres of land (Mass. Records, i. 290). [T.]

[4] John Throckmorton, already mentioned (p. 1), was excommunicated from the church at Salem when Hugh Peters was minister there, and went to Providence with Roger Williams, where he lived until his death. His daughter married John Coggeshall, one of the settlers on Aquidneck, who moved thither after the Hutchinson persecution.

to me in hand payd by Richard Parker of Boston in New England, merchant, whereof and wherewith I acknowledge my selfe satisfied and payd, and thereof and of every parte thereof Doe acquit release and discharge the said Richard Parker his heirs executors and administrators by these presents, Doe hereby grant, bargaine and sell unto the said Richard Parker the One moiety or halfendeale of all that Island heretofore called by the Indians Chibatchuwese, now called Prudence,[1] lately purchased of Canonicus and Miantinomie, Cheife Sachems of the Narrigansetts, w^th^ all and singulare the appurtenances, writings and escripts thereunto belonging, To have and to hold the said moiety and halfendeale of the said Island and all and singular the premises w^th^ the apurtenances whatsoever unto the said Richard Parker his heires and assigns for ever. In witnesse &c. [2*s*.]

This Indenture made the 2 Day of the 3^d^ month, 1639, betweene John Winthrop Esqr. Governor of the Massachusets bay in New England, and Richard Parker[2] of Boston in New England merchant, of the one parte, and John Throckmorton gent. of the other parte, Witnesseth, that the said John Winthrop and Richard Parker for divers good causes and considerations them thereunto moving, Doe by these presents demise, grant & to farme lett unto the said John

[1] Chibatchuwese, or Prudence Island, was purchased of Canonicus by Roger Williams, jointly with Governor Winthrop, in November, 1637. Mr. Williams had sold his half of the island. Governor Winthrop retained his interest, which he left by will to his son Stephen (Winth., ii. 2, app. i.).

[2] Richard and Nicholas Parker, who were probably brothers, sold their house and land in Roxbury in July, 1639 (see p. 76, post), having for some time previously resided in Boston. Richard was admitted an inhabitant of Boston, Sept. 30, 1639; and in February, 1640, had a grant of four hundred acres "at the Mount" Wollaston (Boston Town Records, i. 42, 48). He was a prominent merchant for many years; first selectman in 1651.

By the indentures immediately following it appears that Mr. Parker, having purchased Mr. Throckmorton's half of Prudence Island, joined with Governor Winthrop in a lease of the whole island to Mr. Throckmorton for three years and a half; that at about the same time he purchased "the wharf, crane, and warehouses in Boston," and conveyed one half of the same to Mr. Edward Bendall, who had been one of the former proprietors, and by whose name the wharf was for many years afterwards called. [T.]

Throckmorton, All that their Island called Prudence, w^th^ the appurtenances To have and to hold said Island w^th^ the appurtenances unto the said John Throckmorton his executors, administrators and assignes, from henceforth forth untill the first Day of November next ensuing the date hereof, and after for and during the space of three yeares from the last Day of October next ensuing the Date hereof fully to be compleate and ended, yeelding and paying therefore yearely unto the said John Winthrop and Richard Parker their heires and assignes the full summe of forty pounds by the yeare at one entire payment upon the last day of October in every of the said three yeares. And it is covenanted, concluded and agreed by and betweene the parties to these presents that the said John Winthrop and Richard Parker shall presently deliver unto the said John Throckmorton the summe of forty pounds to stock the said Island w^th^ swine, these to remaine during both the said termes, [43] and in the end thereof the said John Throckmorton shall yeild up the said Island w^th^ the appurtenances unto the said John Winthrop & Richard Parker, their heires and assignes, fully stocked w^th^ forty pounds worth of swine. And if the said John Throckmorton, his executors, adm^rs^ or ass̄s shall build upon and improve the ground of the said Island, as it shall be lawfull for them to doe, then in the end of the said terme of three yeares he or they shall be reasonably satisfyed for the same by the said John Winthrop and Richard Parker, their heires or assignes. Provided allwayes that the said John Throckmorton his executors administrators and assignes shall not Doe any wast upon the premises and shall Duely pay the rent aforesaid at Boston aforementioned. In witnesse etc. [5*s*.]

[1] It would be more in keeping with the plan of this annotation to describe each one of these persons in this note, as being the first appearance of their names in the Note-book. But this seems impracticable; and as almost all of them appear later, I must reserve notice of them until they appear separately.

[2] "The dock, or cove, which was in early times the principal seat of trade in Boston, was long called by [the] name [of Edward Bendall], because he owned part of the upland around it, and had a warehouse on it. It has since been called the town dock; but the exact boundaries, north and south, cannot probably be explained" (Savage, in note to Winth., ii. 72). It was "where Quincy Market now is," according to Mr. Drake (History of Boston, p. 804). November 31, 1649, the selectmen sold the reversion of "the Dock or Cove, Called by the name of Bendall Docke," and the flats belonging to it, to James Everill, who had previously bought land fronting on the dock from John Shaw (Boston Town Records, i. 98; Suff. Deeds, i. 115; Book of Possessions, 19). [T.]

[1] The following letter was copied, or drafted in shorthand, on page 47, but subsequently cancelled by lines drawn across. Blanks are left in place of the words that cannot be confidently deciphered. It was probably written to Mr. William Frost, one of the early planters at Uncowa (Fairfield), "beyond Connecticut." John Gray (or Grey, as Lechford uniformly wrote the name), of Boston, 1639, an older brother of Henry, had married Elizabeth (widow of John Watson), a daughter of Mr. Frost. Henry Gray, "now of Boston, heretofore citizen and merchant of London," had a house-lot granted him by the town, Feb. 19, 1637–38. "The maid who had promised him," and was "fully satisfied" as to his estate and "all other things," was doubtless Lydia Frost, the younger sister of his brother John's wife. Her father was an "old acquaintance" of Lechford. The "honest young man" must have found favor with Mr. Frost, for the couple were married not many months after. Sept. 18, 1640, Henry Gray and his wife Lydia conveyed their house in Boston in trust to Thomas Lechford (see after, p. 176); and both John and Henry removed to Uncowa. Lechford, in Plaine Dealing (p. 43), names among others who were living in the plantations "beyond Connecticut," his "old acquaintance, Master Roger Ludlow, Master Frost, sometime of Nottingham, and his sons, John Grey and Henry Grey." The latter became a man of some prominence in the plantation, and was a deputy from Fairfield to the General Court in 1656 and 1657. [T.]

you, about your satisfaction (?) in the particulars of his estate, — which yet the maid doth not stand on, I am informed, but is fully satisfied thereabout and all other things, and her affections to him remain [ ]. I have seen a passage in his father's letter, whereby he bestows 20l upon him more than formerly, in respect of his charge of building; yet not as his full portion, as I verily believe. His brother also, a citizen of London, hath promised to stock him with 100l worth of commodities from time to time, if the Lord keepe open the way, and he is to have half the profit, which may be of especial advantage. [ ] will show you by his account book that his estate is above 50l for the present, which is as much as her sister here desired and more than the maid herself ever stood on. The maid hath promised him, and he her, as I heare, and the young man doubts whether it may be broken off; wherefore if you remaine unsatisfyed thereabout, whether the promise be good or not he will refer [ ] to yourself and 2 other ministers meete to be deciders, when you come next into the Bay. For my selfe, I [ ] this favour of you, that you would be pleased to seale up my treatises and send them to mee by this bearer, for I am forced to show them to some Elders; and also I would pray you to send me my letter that I formerly wrote unto you, if you thinke good, for some reasons which I will show you when, please God, I see you next; wherein you shall do me a great favour. With my best respects to yourself and your beloved yokefellow in the Lord, wishing you all [ ] grace and prosperity from heaven, I remain yours to be [ ].

[1] Thomas Goffe, a merchant of London, had been interested in the colony at New Plymouth, and was afterwards a patentee of the Massachusetts Company, by whom he was chosen deputy-governor in 1628 and 1629, and was designated by the Court, in November, 1629, with Winthrop, Saltonstall, and the other principal members of the company, as one of the "undertakers for the joint-stock." He did not accompany his associates to New England, and at the meeting at Southampton, March 18, 1629–1630, was left out of office as an assistant, Mr. Simon Bradstreet being elected in his place (Mass. Col. Rec., vol. i.; Mass. Hist. Coll., iii. 48; Savage, in Winth., i. 8).

It appears from this petition that so late as 1639 he had not entirely abandoned the purpose of emigration to Massachusetts. Was his son Samuel already a resident here? [T.]

[2] William Hudson at this time had not been recommended to the General Court by the Town of Boston to keep an ordinary. He was allowed by the Court, April 30, 1640; and there are

Be it known unto all men by these presents that I Robert Feke [2] of Watertowne in New England gent Doe hereby constitute and make & in my place put my welbeloved ffreind Robert Harding of Boston in New England Merchant my true and lawfull Atturney for me and in my name to sue arrest

His house, as noted in the Book of Possessions, was on the south side of State Street, close to the water (near Kilby Street), where he had a wharf running out over the marsh.

[2] Robert Feke, of Watertown, is thought to have come over in the fleet with Winthrop. He was made freeman May 18, 1631, and lieutenant September, 1632; he was several times deputy to the General Court, and in 1636 was appointed one of the magistrates to keep county courts at Watertown.

Robert Harding came in the fleet with Winthrop, and his name is among the early signatures of the church covenant. He was an ensign in Captain Underhill's company, then captain, and was for a long time selectman of Boston. He was an adherent of the Hutchinsons, and in 1639 removed to Rhode Island, where he was an assistant in 1641. In the Note-book later (p. 183) he is called "Cap. Robert Harding, of Newport." In 1646 he went back to England, and, I suppose, remained there.

[1] Henry Fleet sailed from England in 1631, in the employ of George Griffith and others, proprietors of the bark "Warwick," of London, on a voyage to New England and Virginia for trade and discovery. Winthrop mentions her arrival at Nantasket, March 14, 1631–1632, "having been at Pascataquack and at Salem to sell corn, which she brought from Virginia;" April 9, "the bark, with Mr. Maverick's pinnace, went out towards Virginia." The proprietors, in a petition to the Admiralty in July, 1634, allege that, by authority of Sir John Harvey, Governor of Virginia, Fleet had restrained the vessel and profits, to their great loss (Colonial Papers, iii. 21; in Sainsbury's Calendar, i. 184; Winth., i. 71, 72).

George Ludlow probably removed from Massachusetts to Virginia as early as 1631. He was there, at any rate, in 1639, and was appointed one of Sir William Berkeley's Council in 1650 (Sainsbury's Calendar, i. 292, 340). [T.]

Thomas Hett of Hingham, Cowper, Pltiffe, Thomas Shave[3] late of the same, planter, defend^{t}. In an accon of trespas

[1] This and the following depositions probably relate to a matter noticed in the Colony Records. At a Quarter Court at Boston, June 4, 1639, "Henry Laurence was for the p^{r}sent discharged about Capt. Bonito his servant" (Mass. Records, i. 265). With a mark of contraction over the final o, Captain Bonito may stand for Richard Bonython, or Bonighton, of Saco, and a magistrate there in 1636; and it may be inferred that Margery Batman — brought from Saco by Henry Lawrence in 1638 — was claimed by Captain Bonython as his servant by prior indenture or agreement.

There was a Stephen Batson at Saco in 1636, who had a daughter Margery: he removed to Cape Porpus in 1653 (Folsom, History of Saco, pp. 33, 124). Possibly the two names indicate the same man; but whether Batman or Batson is correct I have no means of deciding. More may be found of Moulton in another connection, post, p. 152. [T.]

[2] John Lawrence, "of Charlestown" in 1639, is shown to be the son of Henry Lawrence of the same town. There can be no doubt of his identity with John Lawrence of Watertown, 1636–1662, afterwards of Groton; and his age at the time of deposing, refers his birth to the year 1614 or 1615. The Lawrence Genealogy (Bond's Watertown, pp. 1080–1081) proves John Lawrence, who was "in New England" July, 1639, to have been a son of Henry Lawrence, of Wisset, Co. Suffolk, England, "supposed to be the Henry Lawrence of Charlestown, as early as 1635, who died between 1638 and 1647." But the same genealogy shows that one John, son of Henry, was baptized at Wisset, Oct. 8, 1609, and a brother, Robert, baptized Sept. 16, 1612. The discrepancy in ages thus indicated may be reconciled by supposing the John whose date of baptism is given in the genealogy to have died young, and that John of Watertown was a second son of the same name, two or three years younger than his brother Robert, who remained in England. [T.]

upon the case, 4. 4. 1639. The Plaintiffe complayneth that whereas a certaine parcel of meadow or marish ground conteyning five acres or neare therabouts lying in Hingham aforesaid, was heretofore wrongfully deteyned by the townesmen of the said Towne from the Defend^{t} upon conference therof had by and betweene the said Plaintiffe & Defend^{t} on or about the first day of the fifth moneth in the yeare 1637, at Hingham aforesaid, The said Defend^{t} did promise the Plaintiffe that in consideration he would help the defend^{t} in obteyning the said lands againe into his possession that he the Defend^{t} would give the pl'tiffe [53] the one halfe of the sayd lands to have and to enjoy to him and his heires for ever. And the pl'tiffe saith that indeed he did help the Defend^{t} in obteyning the said lands againe into his possession & he hath since enjoyed the same and taken the proffits thereof above the space of one yeare last past. Notwthstanding the Defend^{t} not regarding his promise aforesaid but intending to defraud the said pltiffe of the one halfe of the said lands & the proffits thereof, hath refused to give the said one halfe of the said lands to the Pl'tiffe but hath taken the proffitts therof wholly to himselfe Although the Plt. Did on or about the last Day of the fifth moneth of the yeare 1638 last past require the Defendt. to performe his said promise unto him this Plaintiffe. [54] Jonathan Bosworth[1] of Hingham, taylor, aged about 26 yeares, maketh oath that Thomas Shave about the beginninge of the fifth moneth 1637 upon occasion of conference betweene him & this Deponent about a parcell of ground in Hingham conteyning about 5 acres then kept from him told this depoñt that he had promised to give halfe therof to Thomas Hett for to help him to obteyne the possession of the said ground and at another time this deponent was present when the said Thomas Het and Thomas Shave talked together of the said promise wherof this deponent remembreth this passage that Thomas Hett asked the said Thomas Shave whether he would be as good as his word, he sayd yes. Then sayd Thomas Hett you are like to have yo^{r} ground againe but when you have it againe I doubt you will be unwilling to let me have halfe of it Noe said Thomas Shave you shall have the one halfe if ever I get it and I shall be glad of the other halfe. [6*d*.]

Benjamin Bosworth[1] of Hingham planter aged about 24 yeares maketh oath that Thomas Shave about the beginning of the fifth moneth 1637 upon occasion of conference betweene him and this Depoñt about a parcell of ground in Hingham conteyning about 5 acres then kept from him the said Thomas told this Depoñt that he had promised to give Thomas Hett halfe therof for to help him recover the same and the said Thomas Shave said further that when he did get the said ground Thomas Het should have halfe of it wth heart & good will and that he the said Thomas Shave should be glad of the rest himselfe & prase God for it. [6*d*.]

[1] Benjamin, Jonathan, and (as I infer from an entry on a subsequent page, as well as from Mass. Col. Rec., i. 152) Nathaniel Bosworth were brothers, and probably sons of Edward, who died on his passage to New England, or before July, 1635.

The humble petition of Thomas Cornell[1] of Boston Inkeeper.

Sheweth that whereas in the winter tyme when provisions were Deare & scarce and yo^{r} petitioner had much losse by his small beare by the frost, he did sell some stronger beere w^{ch} he was at cost to preserve from the frost by fire, for the necessary use of strangers, unto some others, for 2*d.* a quarte, and did since draw out about a rundlet of sacke in his house, not knowing any law to the contrary, seing M^{r} Fortescue told him that he had liberty to Draw by the gallon, or 2 or 3 gallons, yo^{r} petitioner hoping that he might so Doe & save himselfe a labour of sending to the taverne. But seeing yo^{r} petitioner now understandeth that these things are against the lawes, he is very sorry for his offences and all other offences that have been taken notice of by the Court, beseeching you to consider that some miscarriages may passe in such an house against his will and wthout his knowledge, but he hath ben hitherto carefull and shall hereafter Godwilling be more carefull to keepe a good conscience in the said place if you shall please to continue him therein, if not he shalbe ready to leave the same as soone as he can get a chapman for his house, for that he hath not ben heretofore accustomed to [1] Thomas Cornell, or Cornhill, as has been before mentioned, was the successor of William Balston in the second of the two inns or ordinaries licensed in Boston before 1639 (see note on p. 31, ante). With consent of the townsmen, Aug. 20, 1638, he bought Mr. Balston's house, yards, garden, and one close "on the backside of Mr. Coddington's," — one acre, more or less, — two acres in the Mill Field, three at Hog Island, and eighty at Mount Wollaston (Town Records, i. 35; Suff. Deeds, i. 26). The following entry in the records of the Quarter Court, June 4, 1639, shows the occasion of this petition. "Thomas Cornehill was fined £30 for severall offences, selling wine wthout license, and beare at 2^{d} a quart. Hee had warning the 10th 4th m^{o}" (Mass. Col. Rec., i. 266). On the sixth of June the Court abated £10 of his fine and respited the remainder; but provided that he should "cease from keeping intertainment, and the town to provide another" (Ibid., p. 260). such a housekeeping and these are his first offences and his first warning.

All W^ch^ Considered yo^r^ petitioner humbly prayeth the Co^rt^ to be pleased to remit his ffine lately imposed upon him by the Court of Assistants for the said offences, and as long as he continueth in the said housekeeping he promiseth by the help of God to be carefull not to offend in such things or in any other, and shall as his duty bynds him pray for your long life & prosperity & the whole State. A Draught of reasons for 3 deputies to be sent from each town to the General Court: A sheet of paper: At the request of M^r^ Bellingham[1]: 19. 4. 1639. [0–0.]

Coppy of a bill or letter of Attorney to M^r^ Rob^t^ Harding to receive 4^l^ 15^s^ of George Ludlowe[2] for Richard Callacott. Dated 19. 4. 1639. [8*d.*]

[This in cipher.]

Received of M^rs^ Glover[3] in May or the beginning of the month of June, 1639. [10*s.*]

[1] The name of Bellingham is written in the cipher — in accordance with its popular pronunciation of the period — as Bellinge'm (with g soft). [T.]

It appears from this entry by Lechford that Mr. Bellingham — though himself one of the assistants — was opposed to the order of March, 1639, by which towns were prohibited from sending more than two deputies, and which "occasioned some to fear that the magistrates intended to make themselves stronger and the deputies weaker, and so, in time, to bring all power into the hands of the magistrates; so as the people in some towns were much displeased," etc. (Winth., i. 300). [T.]

Mr. Bellingham and Mr. Saltonstall, as Governor Winthrop complains, "held together, and joined with the deputies against the rest of the magistrates," in "cases where any difference was" (Winth., ii. 186, 210). Yet, he concedes, "these gentlemen were such as feared God;" and "where they went aside it was merely for want of light, or their eyes were held through some temptation for a time, that they could not make use of the light they had." So mild a judgment on offenders who "went aside" towards democracy, and perhaps went so far as to maintain the right of petition for the repeal of an obnoxious law, — a measure which, in the Governor's opinion, "savored of resisting an ordinance of God," — is the highest evidence of his charity and goodness of heart. [T.]

[2] George Ludlow came over in 1630, but returned to England very soon.

[1] Richard Cooke and Arthur Perry, the tailors, had, in 1645 or earlier, two houses on School Street. Whether their partnership had by that time dissolved, or whether they still did their business in one shop, I cannot say. Cooke was later known as a military man, being of the Artillery Company, and rising in 1656 to the rank of lieutenant. As for Perry, his rank was more humble. He was at this time town drummer, and held the place for some years. He had been appointed in 1638 with a salary of £5 for "drumming to the company on all occasions." Later, however, he agreed to "give his Best diligence in Teaching George Clifford and Nathaniel Newgate in all the skill and use of the drum needfull to all common service in military affayres." And this agreement I suppose he carried out; for in a year or two he ceased from drumming, — at least in public.

[1] Thomas Leverett and William Colbron, prominent men in the church, were of high consideration in Boston. Thomas Leverett was ruling elder, and also selectman from the time of his choice, shortly after he came over from old Boston, in 1633, until his death, in 1650. William Colbron came in the fleet with Winthrop, was for a long time deacon, and later ruling elder; often, too, selectman. He was banished from the colony, with his religious friends and supporters, in 1638, and established the town of Exeter, where he resided till 1643, when he removed to Wells, Me. Four years later, having been previously reconciled to the Massachusetts authorities, he settled at Hampton. In 1656 he went to England, and remained there till 1662, when he returned to New England, and settled at Salisbury. Here he died Nov. 15, 1679, aged, it is said, above eighty years.

In the bond, executed at nearly the same time with the assignment of lease, he is called of Cape Ann, or Gloucester, where Mr. Savage finds him, with wife, Grace, and children, in 1646, and where he died December, 1684, "aged a hundred or more, as with greater confidence than probability is said" (Savage). Shortly afterwards "Mr. Thomas Milward, mariner," was found at Newbury, where he was a proprietor (Coffin's Newbury, pp. 22, 31, 310); but in September, 1639, he was granted land in Boston (Town Records, p. 42), and in August of the following year described himself, in a deposition taken by Lechford, as of Cape Ann, aged forty years. [1] This was probably Maurice Thompson, a London merchant, who was governor of the East India Company in the time of Charles I. "In or about the year 1647 he went over to Holland, with two or three other commissioners, to solicit the States-General for some relief for the many distressed Protestant families in Ireland that had been plundered or ruined in the war; and having obtained leave of the States to collect voluntary contributions, they brought from thence above thirty-one thousand pounds, for which service they received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament. He is mentioned in Strypes' edition of Stowe's Survey of London as the person who, by his own bounty and application to others, principally advanced the building of the Chapel at Poplar in 1653" (Collins). His son, Sir John Thompson, was created Baron Haversham May 4, 1696. Maurice Thompson was probably the person mentioned by Winthrop in 1639 (Journal, i. 307) as having begun a fishing trade at Cape Ann. In the Hist. and Geneal. Reg. for July, 1884 (vol. xxxviii. p. 318), may be found many interesting details in regard to himself and his family.

Mr. Newbery was early engaged in the movement for emigration to Connecticut, and had sold a portion of his Dorchester property with a view to removal, when prevented by death in December, 1635, or January, 1636. By his will, made Dec. 12, 1635, he gave his wife Jane £200, and constituted her his sole executrix; and the rest of his estate was left to his children. His inventory included "land in England," valued at £300. Mr. Warham and Mr. William Gaylord were named overseers of the will (Geneal. Reg., vii. 29; History of Dorchester, p. 69). It is not certain whether Mr. Warham married the widow at Dorchester, or after the removal of the family to Windsor; but the former is the more probable. [1] This, with others as cursory on pp. 142, 203, 215, are the only allusions to a Mrs. Lechford in this volume. She married Samuel Wilbore after Lechford's death. See Hist. and Geneal. Reg., xxx. 202.

[2] The mention here and afterwards of John Treworthy may do something towards allaying the suspicions of those who have doubted his existence (see Savage). He had two brothers, as I suppose, Nicholas and James; the first of whom is mentioned by Lechford later. This John Treworthy is spoken of later (p. 172) as being agent for Mr. Shapley, of Dartmouth, who was, I think, his brother James's father-in-law (Savage). All three were inhabitants of the towns along the Maine coast, — which would explain their virtual absence from any written records. (See, however, Mass. Col. Rec., i. 254, where Mr. Treworthy is mentioned, with others, of the Maine coast).

[1] I suppose that John Iles here mentioned was the man whom tradition presented to Mr. Savage under the name of John Hills. This latter was said to be a blacksmith of Dorchester. Thomas Marshfield and Henry Wolcott, of Windsor, are spoken of in the Note-book several times (pp. 174, 180). William Gaylord had been of Dorchester, whence he moved to Windsor in 1638. Wolcott, also from Dorchester, was one of the earliest settlers at Windsor, to which place he journeyed in 1635. Thomas Marshfield is supposed to have come from Dorchester also; but this cannot be made certain without confounding him with Thomas Marshall.

[1] One John Gray and his wife Elizabeth are noted in Savage, with no date.

Valentine Hill here appears in his most familiar vocation, as a dealer in real estate. He was one of the most enterprising of the Boston merchants. He came in 1636, was made freeman and also deacon of the church in 1640, and was for a long time one of the selectmen of Boston. Later he became interested in lands at Dover, and I suppose lived there some time. He was at this period often representative for the town. There is mention of him several times in the Note-book.

[1] Gabriel Fish was an early inhabitant of Boston, and soon moved back from Exeter, where he had gone in 1638. Edward Rishworth, Exeter, 1639, married a daughter of the Rev. John Wheelwright, founder of Exeter. He was a son of the Rev. Thomas Rishworth, and a nephew of Samuel Hutchinson, being a son of his sister.

[2] Of these people Savage has the following under John Lyford, of Plymouth, who bred disturbance there, and was compelled to move away. "About 1627 he moved with some adherents to Virginia, and there died soon, it is thought. A reasonable conjecture is that he had wife, Ann, and children, Ruth and Mordecai, left at Nantasket, and that his widow, Ann, who died 1639, had married Edmund Hobart, of Hingham. . . . Mordecai, Hingham, 1642." And under Edmund Hobart he says: "I see reason to infer that a widow Lyford, whom he married later in life, was relict of that Rev. John Lyford who was at Plymouth." This, under the light of this entry and those immediately following, is seen to be substantially correct. Sarah (not Anne, as Savage thinks) had been the wife of Rev. John Lyford, first of Lebeleglish, near Loughgaid (Loughgall? see page 154), in the County of Armagh, Ireland, and subsequently of Plymouth and elsewhere. Mordecai Lyford was their son, born about 1625. For Ruth Lyford, see Suff. Deeds, i. 27. After the death of John, Sarah married, Oct. 10, 1634, in Charlestown, Edmund Hobart, of Hingham. [1] There are also in the Note-book (pp. 121, 126) entries relating to a letter of attorney from John Stratton of Salem to Richard Hutchinson of London to collect money of John Harrison. This man is not to be found in Savage, unless he be the ropemaker of Boston, which I greatly doubt. I think he must be the gambler who was admonished and fined 10*s.* in a court held in June, 1639. On this matter see pp. 97, 99.

Joseph Faber of London, Cooper, sells to Christopher Stanley[1] of Boston in N. E. Tayler, one house and garden

[1] Christopher Stanley, of Boston, came in 1635, and died eleven years after. Savage thinks he was called "tayler" because a member of the Company of Merchant Taylors of London. The only argument for this known to me is that he is often called Mr. Stanley, or Mr. Christopher Stanley. Besides the property here spoken of he purchased of the town, a few years before his death, several acres of the marsh in the Mill-field opposite Charlestown, where he built a wharf.

Joseph Faber, now called of London, though he may at the time have been in Boston, had for some years been of Boston, where he came in 1637, but stayed only a year or so. He is mentioned in Winthrop, however, as being in Boston in September, 1640, which must have been a full year after the present entry.

John Everet, alias Webb, of course as above, p. 60.

These two houses are not very easy to identify. Anne Ormsbee was admitted to the church at Boston in 1634, and recommended to the church at Dedham in 1639. She had a grant of land at Muddy River in 1637 (Boston Town Records, p. 24), and in the Book of Possessions there is a note in the "Possessions of William Aspinwall at Hogg Island one Acre of Upland and three quarters of Marsh bought of Mrs. Ormsbee" (p. 30). No land is found belonging to her in Boston. Robert Rice owned land, and had a house on Fort Street (now Milk); and taking this as a northern boundary would make the lot here mentioned part of Robert Keayne's garden, in regard to the boundaries of which there is some doubt. So it seems as though the question must remain in doubt.

The other house is entered in the name of Christopher Stanley in the notes on the Book of Possessions, p. 96. The note reads: "William Balston sold the lot August, 1638, when it consisted of house, yard, garden, and close," backside of Mr. Coddington, "to Thomas Cornell, or Cornwell, who sold to Edward Tyng, 1643, and he to Christopher Stanley." This statement does not agree with the present entry; and I must think that the deed from which it is drawn (Book

[1] That Nathaniel Enfling is unmentioned in any other authority known to me goes towards showing either that he was in Boston for a short time only, or that he lived the most retired life imaginable. One would at least suppose that a servant to John Cogan could be found on the church register.

[1] Isaac Cullimore (which seems the more common way of spelling the name) is called a shipwright by Savage; on what evidence I cannot say. His most prominent appearance in the Town Record is as being appointed to look to the carriages and wheels of the great artillery. In the Colonial Record, also, he is spoken of as mending carriages, so that one would think that he was something of a wheelwright. He lived near Gallop's Point, on the water-side, by the shipyards of Nehemiah Bourne and Thomas Hawkins, the shipwrights, and Thomas Joy, the carpenter.

[1] Anne Coleman and Samuel Hosier did not get their five pounds as soon as seemed well to them, and made a second letter of attorney — to whom I know not — for the same purpose. See p. 167, post.

[2] Savage speaks of John Cogan, Jr., admitted freeman in 1642, as being son of Humphrey, who never came to New England. I think this must be a mistake, for it very clearly says in this place that John Cogan, Jr., was the son of John. His age, now about seventeen, would make him twenty or twenty-one when he took the freeman's oath, May 18, 1642.

Edward Weeden — generally called of Boston — came from England in the same ship ("Susan and Ellen," 1635) as Richard Brooks. As for Dunton, I cannot fix him. There were Duntons of Reading, at this time a part of Lynn.

twenty years old. He is here called fisherman. Later he was in a company of vintners (Mass. Col. Rec., ii. 277), but very probably he turned his hand to whatever came uppermost. He served in the Parliamentary war in England, being ensign in Mr. John Leverett's foot company (Winth., ii. 245), and died in the summer of 1681.

[1] Richard Saltonstall came to Massachusetts with his father 1630, but returned soon to England. He came back to Massachusetts, however, and at this time was an assistant. The governor here spoken of was John Winthrop, Sr.

The persons mentioned as attorneys I have not the means of identifying. Isaac Appleton was probably either the son or brother of Samuel, who had a grandson bearing that name.

[1] The names of various of the Hutchinson family repeatedly occur in Lechford. Mr. Savage has published a careful enumeration of the different members in his Genealogical Dictionary. It will make clearer the papers relating to the family which occur later in the Note-book to remember that William Hutchinson, the husband of the famous Anne, had brothers, — Richard, of London; Samuel, of Boston; and Edward, of the same. His sons were Edward, who came to New England before his father, Richard, and others who are not mentioned in Lechford. Of these brothers, Richard never came to New England at all. William came to New England in 1634 with his wife and all his sons save Edward. He was forced through church troubles to remove in 1638 to Rhode Island, where, with Aspinwall, Coddington, and others, he formed a political community, of which, in their second year, he was chosen ruler or judge. He died about 1642. Samuel was of Boston. He was involved, with the rest of his family, in the Antinomian dispute (Mass. Col. Rec. i. 207, 338). He may or may not have gone with his brother William to Aquidneck, where he had a grant of land, May 20, 1638. He is subsequently mentioned by Lechford, however. Edward, the brother, is not mentioned in the Note-book, except perhaps ante, p. 93. He went to Rhode Island, and from there to England. Of the sons, Edward and Richard are the only ones mentioned by Lechford. Edward came to Boston a year before his father and mother. With his father he removed to Rhode Island, but shortly afterward returned to Boston. He served in King Philip's war, where he received a wound of which he died Aug. 17, 1675. Richard came from England with his father, but returned to London before the other members of the family moved to Rhode Island. He is repeatedly referred to in the Note-book, as well as his shop, — The Angel and Star, in Cheapside, London.

[2] John Coggeshall, another sympathizer with Mrs. Hutchinson and Mr. Wheelwright, also went to Newport, where he became one of the principal men, as he had before been in Boston. The house and garden alluded to were on what is now the corner of School and Washington. The Old Corner Bookstore occupies a portion of the property.

[1] Sergeant Thomas Savage, born 1608, married Faith, daughter of William Hutchinson. He was disarmed in 1637 for his sympathy with Mrs. Hutchinson and Wheelwright, and removed to Rhode Island with the Hutchinsons, but returned to Boston, where he died Feb. 14, 1682.

[2] Bray Rossiter was of Dorchester, 1631, but removed to Winsor, Conn., and then to Guilford; he died 1672. John Gore was of Roxbury. William Wyatt I have been unable to find.

Knowe all men by these presents that wheras Gabriel Cornish [4] of Weymouth & Melcomb Regis in the County of Dorset mariner did by his letter of Attorney under his hand & seale dated the sixth day of May last past authorize and appoint me Israel Stoughton [5] of Dorchester in New England

[1] Anne Garrold may have been the sister or the wife of Henry Garrold, of Boston, 1639, mentioned by Savage. I can find the name nowhere else. George Barrel and William Barrel were brothers; and the wife of George was named Ann; from which I imagine that he married Anne Garrold. The house spoken of was on Hanover Street, a little below Washington (Book of Possessions, p. 421).

[2] Timothy Hatherly, one of the principal first settlers at Scituate, was before a London merchant. He came to Plymouth in 1623, and was well known there for some time, but went home again. He came back again to Boston in 1632. He died in 1666. In regard to this matter, see infra. Much in regard to Hatherly, though not pertinent to the matter in hand, is to be found in Bradford's History. Hatherly and Allerton, the latter principally, conducted the business of the Plymouth Colony with James Shirley, their London correspondent and his partners.

[3] Joseph Young, I suppose, was of Salem (Mass. Col. Rec., ii. 36). Pease was in later years a favorer of the Gortonist movement (Mass. Col. Rec., ii. 50).

[4] Gabriel Cornish never came to this country. There was a Gabriel Cornish in Connecticut toward the latter part of the century, who might easily be a descendant of this man.

[5] Israel Stoughton, a prominent man in Dorchester, owned the mill alluded to a few pages back in the deed of Edward Hutchinson, etc. He came to America, says Savage, in 1632; was admitted freeman 1633; was representa-

And whereas the said Thomas Richards made unto the said Gabriel Cornish one other bond or obligation for the same money w^{ch} bond the said Gabriel carryed into England and by his letter to me written did promise to cancell or deliver up the said last mencõned bond upon notice of the payment of the said one hundred pounds to me by vertue of the said letter of Atturney according to the appointment or demand of the said Thomas Richards, Now knowe yee that I have received the said summe of one hundred pounds of the said Thomas Richards according to the forme & effect of the said bonds and letter of Attorney, And thereupon doe by these presents for as much as in me lyeth for and in the name of the said Gabriel remise release and forever quitt clayme unto the sayd Thomas Richards all and all manner of actions and demands w^{ch} the said Gabriel his executors or administrators have or can or may have against him the said Thomas Richards his heires executors or administrators for and concerning the said debt of one hundred pounds or upon the sayd bonds or either of them.

And further I doe hereby give & grant unto the said Thomas Richards the said letter of Attorney safe and uncancelled to have to him his executors & administrators forever.

tive in the General Court for some years, and commanded the force against the Pequots in 1637. He went back to England, and commanded a company for the Parliament in the Civil War; but died of sickness at Lincoln in 1644.

[1] Thomas Richards's name occurs several times in the early Dorchester records, but he removed soon after this date to Weymouth, where he was living when he is next mentioned in the Note-book.

[3] There is another bill of exchange later in the Note-book between these two men, drawn for the benefit of Stephen Offley, who, as well as Robert, seems never to have come to America. Thomas Nichols and George Nichols, mentioned in the second bill of exchange, were also Englishmen, and I believe never came to New England.

[1] Samuel Hosier, of Watertown, was chosen constable in 1644, but otherwise is not mentioned by contemporary authorities. I should imagine that he was of that well-to-do class who are not of a station high enough to get into the records as officers, nor low enough to appear therein as criminals, and are therefore almost unnoticed by history.

[2] William Boreman could not have been a satisfactory apprentice. Richard Gridley, the brickmaker, no sooner had him than he turned him over to William Townshend, thatcher, who, I imagine, turned him over to Job Judkin, of what trade I know not; and his last appearance in this Note-book is in the act of being turned over by this last to Thomas Witherly, mariner. Now Witherly came from Connecticut, and went back there at times, and may have brought Boreman with him; for we find against Boreman's name in Savage, "perhaps of Wethersfield, 1645; was of Guilford,

THOMAS RUCKE of Charlestowne in New England planter Plt.
WILLIAM HATCH of Scituate in New England planter Defdt.

To the Governor & assistants of the Jurisdiction of New Plymouth in New England humbly complayning showeth unto yo^{r} Worshipps Thomas Rucke of Charlestowne in New England planter that whereas this Com^{plt} and one Joseph Meriam of Concord in New England Planter and William Hatch of Scituate in New England Planter Came joynt undertakers in the shipp Castle of London w^{ch} arrived at the port of Charlestowne in the moneth of July Anno Dñi 1638. And one the said William Hatch of London was also undertaker with them and undertooke by agreement to manage as a steward all their joynt businesse of undertaking and concerning every mans passage and all passengers goods that came in the said shipp and to take notice and keepe account how much every passengers goods and how much the said severall undertakers owne goods were in tunnage and what every one of the said passengers and undertakers were to pay for their severall passage & goods and to deliver to every [one] of the said undertakers & passengers their severall allowance of victualls & to cause that all the Caske vessells rundletts & provisions layd in for store and left at the said shipps arrival in New England aforesaid should be equally divided to the said undertakers parte & part like, for w^{ch} stewardship the said William Hatch was allowed by the said Com^{plt} & Joseph Meriam the summe of 30^{li} and other profitts to the value of 20^{li} more in all 50^{li}

1650." He may not be the same man, however. As for Gridley, he was one of the very early settlers, and is frequently mentioned in the early Boston records, sometimes in relation to his trade as brickmaker, and sometimes in regard to his public duties. He was captain of militia, and was also one of the water-bailiffs of the town for some time. He is mentioned in the Colonial Records only in the orders relating to the Hutchinson disturbance; from which it may be inferred that he was more popular in the town of Boston than in the colony at large.

whereupon this Com^{plt} hoped that the said William Hatch would have made a just account betweene the master of the said ship & others & the said undertakers.

But the said William Hatch taking advantage of this Comp^{lts} sicknesse & weaknesse at sea did in the p^{r}sence of the master of the said ship at Boston in New England in July aforesaid & at Charlestowne aforesaid overreckon misreckon account short & mischarge upon this Com^{plt} divers particulare things hereinafter expressed w^{ch} this Com^{plt} since came to the knowledge & remembrance of: And first this Com^{plt} showeth [106] that the proper goods of this Com^{plt} brought in the said ship did amount in tunnage but to tenne tunnes & an halfe the tunnage whereof came to but thirty one pounds & tenne shillings but the said William Hatch charged the said Com^{plt} wth fifteen tunns of goods & a barrell & for the same the Com^{plt} hath payd for the tunnage of so much forty five pounds whereby the said William Hatch overreckoned this Com^{plt} 14^{li} Item by the said overreckoning of this Com^{plt} goods the said Wm. Hatch charged the summe of forty shillings on the said Com^{plt} for custome of foure tunnes & halfe of goods more than belonged to the Com^{plt} to allow for: at 9^{s} by the tunne. Item thereby the said William Hatch overcharged this Com^{plt} eight shillings payd to the said Master for primage & average and eight shillings more to lightermen for lighterage of foure tunnes & halfe of goods more than belonged to this Com^{plt} to allow for. Item the said William Hatch should have accounted to this Com^{plt} for three bushells & halfe of meale worth twenty and eight shillings w^{ch} meale was to have bin delivered to this Com^{plt} for him & his family by sea according to common allowance but this Com^{plt} having meale for his owne use agreed to receive his said allowance in meale altogether at landing but the said William Hatch never accounted for nor satisfyed this Com^{plt} for the same. Item the said William Hatch hath not accounted for nor satisfyed this Com^{plt} for his parte of the bread sacks brought by the said undertakers joyntly w^{ch} p^{t} was worth ffifty two shillings & six pence. Item nor for this Com^{plts} parte of the cookes store by the said undertakers joyntly provided w^ch^ parte was worth thirty six shillings and six pence nor for this Com^plts^ parte of the vinegar brought by the said undertakers of the voyage w^ch^ parte was worth 3 shillings & sixpence. Nor for this Com^plts^ parte of the empty rundlets & wine casks provided by the said undertakers w^ch^ parte was worth two shillings & six-pence, Nor for this Com^plts^ parte of the suger brought by the said undertakers w^ch^ parte was worth eight shillings & six pence, Nor for this Complaynants parte of the money for the victualls w^ch^ the Brother of the said William & 8 or 9 other persons the proper passengers of the said William had for three weeks together after the said ship came to anchor in the said porte which parte the said William Hatch was to answer for & pay to this Com^plt^ they being his the said Wm. Hatch's proper passengers, & amounted to 30*s.* at the least. He prayeth that the said William Hatch be injoyned to sett downe the same in writing upon his oath. Item the said William [107] Hatch mischarged or overcharged this Com^plt^ with sixteene shillings & foure pence for tunnage of halfe a tun of goods of Henry Swan w^ch^ he refuseth & hath not right to pay so much because they were victualls & not broadcloth. Item the said William Hatch mischarged this Com^plt^ with fifteene shillings and six pence for the tunnadge of Ann Baker her goods w^ch^ the said Joseph Meriam did receive. Item the said William Hatch accounted short the bisket of the said undertakers w^ch^ he sould at Boston aforesaid wh^r^of the Com^plt^ parte came to three shillings and three pence more than the said William Hatch did account for. Item the said W. H. hath confessed himself to be in arreages to the Com^plt^ the summe of 17^li^ 9^s^ by his letter dated 14^th^ Sept. 1638 whereof since the said Wm. Hatch hath paid the Com^plt^ 10^li^ by the hands of Joseph Kitcherell and by M^r^ Sparhawke 35*s.* 3*d.* and by John Fishenden 17*s.* in all 12^l^ 12*s.* 6*d.* so that there resteth due the residue whereof that is 4^l^ 16. 9 to the Com^plt^ So that the said William Hatch is in arrerages to this Complaynant the summe of 31. 6. 3*d.* pounds at the least. All w^h^ premises are well knowne to the said William Hatch. And because the said Complainant cannot so exactly prove the said particulare things as law requires therefore he prayeth that the said William Hatch may be enjoyned to answer all the premises upon his oath particularely in writing and further to stand to & abide such order & decree therein as shall seeme to yo^{r} worships to stand with equity & good conscience. And this Complaynant shall as his duty byndeth him pray for yo^{r} worships health & prosperity and of the publicke. [6*s.* 8*d.* Sent to M^{r} Nath. Humbly complayning shews unto yo[r] worpps William Cole late of Chew magna in the county of Somerset gent & Elizabeth his wife Daughter & executrix of the last will & testament of Francis Doughty [1] late of the city of Bristoll merchant deceased that whereas the said Francis Doughty in his life time stood master of & had right unto a certaine lease of a farme called Hamsted farme in the county of Gloucester to enioy to him and his assigns during the lives of divers of his children w[ch] farme was worth 2000[l] at the least and was possessed of some small personal estate to the value of forty pounds or thereabouts and whereas Francis Doughty Clerke son of the said Francis Doughty Deceased being in his said fathers displeasure came to this com[plt] Elizabeth when she was sole and intreated her to speake unto her said father for the said Francis the sonne & to pursuade w[th] her said father that he would bestowe and settle the said lease of the said farme on the said Francis the sonne in case that Jacob Doughty brother of the said Elizabeth were dead or should dye so that the said Francis the sonne might enjoy the same after the debts & legacyes should be payd & his will performed and then promised her that if she would so speak for him & that she could prevayle with her said father that he would so bestowe & settle the said lease & farme upon him the said Francis the sonne as aforesaid that he would give her a better portion than her father would give unto her and the said Compl[t] saith that she the said Elizabeth did speake unto her said father for the said Francis the sonne accordingly and

[1] Of Francis Doughty the elder I know nothing more than is here set down. He never came to America. His son Francis, however, was a minister at Taunton for some years, after which he removed to Long Island. Of Cole, who married Elizabeth Doughty, nothing is known, save that he died a year or two after this date. The course of events in this case may be followed in the second volume of Mass. Col. Rec., pp. 74, 191, 203, 257, 272; also in the third and fourth volumes of the same, if the investigator's patience should by any chance hold out. Mrs. Cole did not get what she wanted, finally fell sick, and was cared for at the expense of the Colony; after which her petitions ceased. The Humphrey Hooke may be the same man as the one who had dealings with Joseph Younge, mariner.

her said father did thereupon bestowe & settle upon the said Francis the sonne the said lease of the said farme to be his after the debts & legacyes of the said Francis Doughty Deceased should be payd and his will performed and to that end & purpose the said Francis Doughty Deceased did in his life time by Indenture make a demise of the said farm unto Humfrey Hooke merchant & others for the terme of tenne yeares [111] [part here is in cipher] for the performance of his will namely for the payment of his debts & raysing of porc̃ons for the children of the said Francis and afterwards by the same Indenture or some other conveyance the said farm & lease in reversion after the said tenne yeares was settled & bestowed upon the said Francis sonne by his said father through the mediation of the said Elizabeth. And the said Compl^{ts} say also that the said Francis Doughty Deceased did by his last will & testament and by the said Indenture give unto the said Elizabeth the summe of 160^{l} in money & goods for her portion & made her his sole executrix of his said will, the said Jacob Doughty being dead at the time of making the said Indenture or dying shortly after, so that he is lyable to pay unto the Comp^{lts} in regard of the premises the summe of 160^{l} but the said Francis Doughty the sonne having since gotten possession of the said farme & lease sold the same for above 1000^{l} being altogether careless & little weighing his promise aforesaid did not give the said Compl^{t} Elizabeth when she was sole nor any time since the Compl^{ts} marriage, to them both or either of them hath not given a better portion than the said Francis Doughty Deceased, did give unto her the said Elizabeth although he hath often bin put in mind & required the same by the Comp^{lts}, but hath refused & still doth refuse to performe his sayd promise. And whereas also by the said Elizabeth her Executrixship aforesaid shee had right to the surplusage of the money that should have bin mayde out of the said terme of tenne yeares in the said farme after the said debts & legacyes payd w^{ch} would have bin at least two hundred pounds [cipher] so endeavoring to defeate the Comp^{lts} of the said surplusage which seeing that it would have bin two hundred pounds at the least it was & would have bin & still is in right & equity due to the said Com^{plts} by vertue of the said Executrixship. And whereas also by the said Indenture made to the said Humfrey Hooke & others or at least by equity thereof all the debts of the said Francis Doughty Deceased & all charges going forth of the said farme were to be payd forth of the profitts of the said farme or out of the said farme itself [cipher] notwithstanding the said Compl^{t} Elizabeth out of her the said Elizabeths smale portion aforesaid was compelled to pay unto Robert Nelson gent the summe of sixteene pounds for the debt of the said Francis Doughty Deceased & unto Marmaduke Chapman Clerke tenne pounds for tythes of the said farme w^{ch} being in all twenty six pounds the said Francis Doughty the sonne ought in equity in regard of the promises to repay unto the said Compl^{ts}. [Cipher.] And whereas also the said Compl^{t} William Cole at the speciall instance & request of the said Francis Doughty and for the debt of the said Francis became bounden with him in and by one [112] obligation bearing date the eleventh day of December in the tenth yeare of his Ma^{ts} raigne that now is unto one Edmund Belsine whilest he lived of the city of Bristoll sopemaker in the summe of three score pounds for the payment of thirty pounds on the twenty fifth day of March w^{ch} shall be in the yeare of our Lord One thousand six hundred & forty so that the said William Cole is lyable to pay the said thirty pounds to the Executrix of the said Edmund & he knoweth not how much costs & dammages besides if the said Francis doe not pay the same and forasmuch as the said Francis hath a purpose to remove his dwelling forth of the Jurisdiction of this Court where this Compl^{t} cannot tell he humbly prayeth that the said Francis may be enjoyned heere forthwith to save the plt. from the said bond. Edward Wood[1] for 13^l^ 5*s.* in hand assignes Thomas Cooper sonne of Henry Cooper of little Bowden in North^ton^

[1] Edward Wood here mentioned may have been the baker of Charlestown of the same name, with whom Lechford had dealings, as we shall see later. Leonard Buttolph (or Buttal, Buttol, Buttolph, Buttolfe, Buttle, for in all these ways does his name appear in the Boston Town Records, while Savage calls him Buttels, and the Colonial Records Bowtle) was allowed an inhabitant Nov. 25, 1639, and had a house, though where it was I cannot say [but see Suff. Deeds, i. 142]. He had later two limekilns on Captain Gibbons's ground at Foxhill. What connection he had with Thomas of the same name is not clear. Thomas Cooper I suppose to have been the man who in 1641 removed to Springfield, and was killed by the Indians in 1675.

[1] Savage says that John Cole, the son of Samuel, was born in England. If Samuel had another son besides the John noted in Savage, he must have died early, as would seem from the grandfather putting the boy to prentice rather than the father. John Mylam, the cooper, had a house on the north shore of Town Cove, and a wharf in front of it. Some difference of opinion existed in regard to the spelling of his name, as well as to that of Mr. Buttolph.

[2] Thomas Hammond came to Hingham, was freeman 1637, and afterwards removed to Watertown, and again to Cambridge. Edmund Hubbard we have already noted. Of the rest, David Phippen was freeman March 3, 1635; is mentioned in the Colonial Records as defendant in a case which was not tried. He removed to Boston, and died, meantime, before 1650. Henry Smith came over from England, and was made freeman this very year. He was an inhabitant of Hingham until 1641, when he removed to Rehoboth. I think he may have been some relative to the Henry Smith who was named with Ludlow and others as having leave to go to Connecticut. Thomas Underwood while of Hingham was representative twice, and once selectman. He afterwards removed to Watertown. John Folsom came over in the same ship with Henry Smith — the "Diligent," of Ipswich — from Old Hingham, in Norfolk. He died at Exeter, where he had removed Dec. 27, 1681. William Sprague came to Hingham in 1635, and lived there most of his life, though he moved to Marshfield and back again probably before this time. Joseph Parke I have not been able to find. Parke was by no means an uncommon name, but I do not discover any Joseph.

And against David Phippen Joseph Parke Henry Smith Thomas Underwood John Folsom & William Sprague for their fences being downe & unrepayred whereby all the trespasses have ben don upon the plt. to his dam: 3[l] [iidem 1*s*.]

John Long[1] hath a peticion to the Governor &c for M[r] Whetcombs[2] land.

Showeth that wheras Simon Whetcombe Deceased had right to certaine ground in New England that one Isaacke Richmond did inclose for the use of the said Simon and the frame & timber he provided for the building of an house there and whereas Mary Whetcombe the late wife & executrix of the last will & testament of the said Simon did give all the right she had in the premises and intended all right of the said Simons adventure unto one Thomas Brooke who made his will nuncupative at sea & gave yo[r] petitioner all right in the said lands & premises & dyed. Yo[r] petioner humbly prayeth that for as much as the said Simon Whetcombe had some adventure in this Plantation that the said lands may be conferred on yo[r] petitioner to whome the right in equity is duely come if they may be found if not that then some other lands may be given this petitioner in lieu thereof & of the said adventure according to equity and yo[r] petitioner shall as his duty is ever pray for yo[r] worpps health & prosperity & the publique. [1*s*.]

[1] I cannot think that this is the man who came with his father, Robert, in the "Defence" from London in 1635; for if so he would be but ten years old. It is hardly pertinent to the case to know that John Long was, a year or two after this, fined for distemper in drinking (Mass. Col. Rec., i. 316). The name occurs later in the Note-book in another matter.

[2] Simon Whitcomb is, however, better known. He was "an active member of the Company at home," says Mr. Haven, "but did not come to New England. . . . We may conclude that he was a man of some substance, a respectable citizen, and a zealous Puritan; but our knowledge of him is confined to the few facts which we gather from the Records" (Archæologia Americana, vol. iii. p. li). I have nowhere found mention of the land granted to him. In a letter from the Company in England to Endicott (Mass. Col. Rec., i. 404) it says that Mr. Whitcomb recommends to the Company one Isack Rickman to receive his diet and house-room at the charge of the Company. I suppose this is the man here called Isaac Richmond, of whom otherwise I find no mention in Savage or elsewhere. Thomas Brooke must have died at sea, since his will was considered valid.

[1] Elizabeth Poole is well known as being the founder of the town of Taunton, which plantation she began in 1637, as one finds in Winthrop (i. 252), who calls her "an ancient maid, one Mrs. Poole." She was at that time forty-eight years old, having been born in 1589. Her brother William accompanied her to Taunton, and lived some time there, but returned afterwards to Dorchester, whence he had come.

[2] Little is known from contemporary history of Josiah Dastin, or of his wife Lydia, and still less about the incident here referred to. The name is usually spelt Dustin. In regard to Matthew Cradock's house near the Mystic, the ground was granted to him by the General Court some years before this (*Mass. Col. [1] It is difficult to be sure of identifying this Thomas Fisher and Mary his widow; but I think him the man of that name who came from Winton in England to Cambridge in 1634, and moved, says Savage, from there to Dedham in 1637. Exactly when he died I cannot say. The date here is two years after his removal to Dedham, which would afford him ample time. Some while after, this Widow Fisher, — whom I suppose to be the Mary in the text, — of Dedham, had liberty given her by the General Court to take the administration of her husband's estate for the benefit of her children (Mass. Col. Rec., i. 292). This Mary Fisher we may reasonably believe to have been the widow who joined the Boston Church in 1647, and died 1653. "Great labor," says Savage, "I have found to conciliate these Fishers; and some of it may seem unsuccess." I think, however, this passage in Lechford supplies a link which was wanting in Savage's train of reasoning.

In regard to Elisha Bridges and John Blackstone and Sara his wife, I regret to say my researches have been less successful. The name of Elisha Bridges does not occur in Savage; Blackstone may have been some relative to the Rev. Wm. Blaxton, who had a son John.

It seems to me that this Johnson is some relative of Davy Johnson, who came over in 1630 in the "Mary and John" with Edward Rossiter, a member of the Company. They both settled in Dorchester, and died there, — Rossiter in a year, and Johnson some years before the date of this entry. Edward Rossiter had a son of the same name as himself, who had property in the county of Somerset. I feel quite sure that the Rossiter here alluded to is one of the sons of Edward Rossiter. As for the Johnson, I am more doubtful. All my search in Savage has failed to find any Johnson with wife Jane. Francis Johnson of Salem, who came over in the same year as Davy, had a wife Joan, and he and his wife may be the ones mentioned here. It could not be Davy Johnson who is meant, for he died before 1636.

[1] Daniel Clarke, who is thus arrested at the King's suit, was tried at a quarter court held in Boston Sept. 3, 1639, and found to be an immoderate drinker. He was fined £2, of which, says the Record, he paid 3*s.* to the jury, and the rest to Increase Nowell, the secretary. Besides this, he does not appear again in court for some time, — nor, indeed, anywhere else. I suppose him to be of Ipswich. As for John Wedgewood, the witness, he got small good for his trouble, for he was condemned to be set in the stocks at Ipswich for being in the company of drunkards. He had served in the Pequot war, and had there been wounded.

[2] Christopher Batt, of Colchester, afterwards Salisbury, was a prominent man in his town. He was a tanner by trade; but, besides this, he was at times drill officer, commissioner for trying small causes, and many times deputy. He came from the city of Salisbury, England, in 1638, being thirty-seven years of age. He lived, as has been said, at Salisbury, in New England, and removed to Boston, where he was accidentally killed Aug. 10, 1661. Of the others I can find no mention, and suppose that the whole transaction refers to affairs in England to which no successful illumination can be applied. [117] To the Hon^ble^ the Governor, Council and Assistants of this Jurisdiction and to the General Court thereof assembled 10–7–1639.

The humble supplication or petition of THOMAS LECHFORD [late of Clements Inn in the county of Middlesex Gent, crossed out on revision].

Truly showing and acknowledging that he did offend in speaking to the Jury without leave, in the cause of William Cole and his wife; and so much the more inexcusable was this delinquent inasmuch as he knew it was not to be done by the law of England. Yet he conceived it was not Embracery, for that he had no reward so to doe; and some extenuation may, he conceiveth, be gathered by one or two seeming approbations of the like which he hath observed in other Causes here. Notwithstanding, he is heartily sorry for his offence, and acknowledgeth the justice of this Court, and is comforted in this—that he hopeth it may doe him good and the example be a benefit to the publick. Touching his speaking in publick for future time, he submitteth to the wisdom of the Court; and for that which is past, he came to the Court being retained, and it's true stood there at the lower end, next the deputy Marshal, attending unto a cause or two wherein your petitioner was retained. It was to show his readiness to do the Country any service he might, as well as to get a little money for himself. Some speeches of his, specially some involuntary and of sudden [interruptions ?] of some [in authoritie ?] being made, whereof some might be occasioned by themselves [being too tartly, as he conceiveth, rebuked and hindered by some of the Court] and zeal of speaking for his matters, may seem to offend such as have not been accustomed much to publique pleadings of advocates. Such [passion ?] of his and involuntary offences he humbly prayeth may be passed by: and such occasions of publique pleadings your supplicant will readily forbear, as not being sufficient or inclinable by nature thereunto. And he hopeth that this Court and Country may upon trial of this petitioner in some other [use] find him, as in many things [ignorant] so teachable and tractable. In the meanwhile, if your petitioner hath any the least talent to doe you any service in any way of profitting himself [for his] livelihood, he desireth it. He is heartily ready, and humbly prayeth the same, in regard of his low and poor estate, not unknown to some of your Worships: Unfeignedly desiring both to live and die with you in the way of God's ordinances, wherein your petitioner hopeth in some good time or other some of the reverend Elders and himself may come to a perfect or at least a fair understanding of each other, which that we may do is the unfeigned daily prayer of your unworthy petitioner.

Carter is noted in Wyman (p. 186) as a blacksmith. Morrill was born, it was said, in 1588, came in 1632 in the "Lion," and lived in Roxbury. He had a wife and several children, and died Dec. 20, 1661.

[1] John Stone had been of Hartford, but shortly after this, if not even before, removed to Guilford. William Edwards was freeman at Hartford in 1658, although he had been there since 1639.

[2] Thomas Mayhew was at this time of Watertown, but afterwards, about 1647, together with his son, removed to Martha's Vineyard, where they had charge of the church there gathered. He came to New England before 1632, having with him his wife Jane and a son, Thomas Mayhew, Jr., the son of a former wife, at that time ten or eleven years old. Thomas Mayhew died in the Vineyard 1681. His son, Thomas Mayhew, Jr., was lost at sea in 1657, at the age of thirty-seven. This passage should correct some confusion in Savage's account of the Mayhews, father and son. Mr. Savage would make the wife of Thomas Mayhew the elder to be Grace, the widow of Thomas Paine. Jane Paine, he thinks (perhaps a daughter of Grace), was the wife of Thomas Mayhew, Jr. "Nor," he goes on, "do I believe that it was the son who was, in 1647, chosen by Thomas Paine, then fifteen years old, as with his wife Grace, guardians for him." This becomes now much clearer. If we can trust Lechford, we must believe, first, that the widow of Thomas Paine was not Grace, but Jane; second, that Thomas Mayhew Jr.'s wife, whatever her name may have been, was not the Jane Paine here spoken of; and, lastly, that whomever Thomas Paine chose in 1647 at fifteen years of age, he did choose, eight years before, his father-in-law, Thomas Mayhew, and his mother, Jane Paine Mayhew, to be his guardians.

[1] The number of John Rogerses to be found in Savage is so large, and they are so confused, that I have been unable to fix this one by the slight hold that we have on him. From the fact that no Thomas and no Daniel there noted, could be the men here mentioned, I imagine that they remained in England. Arthur Draper, for the same reason, I should imagine to be an Englishman.

THOMAS ALLEN.[1]

Surrey, who died on the passage to New England. Mr. Glover, it is said, had made contract with one Stephen Day to come to America and set up a printing-press at Cambridge. Accordingly we see in Winthrop (i. 289) that Day on his arrival set up the press, although Mr. Glover had died. Mrs. Glover subsequently married Henry Dunster, afterwards the first president of Harvard College (Savage). Mrs. Glover is frequently alluded to in the succeeding pages of the Note-book. As for the land at Rumney Marsh, see post, p. 141.

[1] Thomas Allen. I think it most likely that this was the Rev. Thomas Allen, of Cambridge, the friend of John Harvard, though there is small ground for any decision among the three or four Thomas Allens mentioned by Savage.

[2] George Story, who is mentioned once or twice after this in the Note-book, I suppose to have been the one who assisted Mrs. Sherman i her suit against Captain Keayne two or three years after this. For the whole of the story about the pig, see Winthrop (ii. 69, 116). No more is known of him, however, than this, unless, says Savage, he were in 1643 of Maine.

[1] Vincent Potter was in New England for only a short time. He came over in 1635, being twenty-one years old. For a year or two he was a soldier at the castle, but went back to England 1639 (see ante, 60, 65). As for William Browne, he may be the same who was admonished (Mass. Col. Rec., i. 315) not to use such base speeches as he had on one occasion been guilty of. Otherwise, I fear we know him not, — unless, indeed, he be one among the thirteen William Brownes to be found in Savage.

[2] Thomas Joy is, I am happy to say, by no means such an unknown quantity. He was a house-carpenter, who was at this time only two or three years in the town. He married Joan, the daughter of John Gallop, and lived in a house on the north shore of the Town Cove (Book of Possessions, K. 20, p. 127), some few lots to the east of his father-in-law. He removed, however, to Hingham about 1647, and lived there until his death in 1678. As late, however, as 1660 there is a reference in the Town Records to the accounts of Thomas Joy and partner for building the town-house and staircases. Who the partner was I cannot say. It may have been William Browne.

[3] John Wickes had before this lived at Plymouth, where he is said first to have met Samuel Gorton, with whom he subsequently became involved. He originally came from Staines, in Middlesex, where he had been a tanner; and leaving his brother Thomas, he went to New England with his wife and an infant daughter. At Portsmouth, where he lived, he seems to have had relations with the Hutchinsons, who remained there after Coddington and his friends had withdrawn to Newport. In 1643, however, Wickes moved across the bay to what is now Warwick, where Gorton and his company had settled. When the Gortonists were brought to Boston, Wickes was one of them, and, with six others, was condemned to confinement with hard labor and irons. Wickes was confined at Ipswich, Gorton at Charlestown, and the rest at other towns. I should imagine that he was released shortly, however, for in 1647 he was a town magistrate. He was killed by Indians 1675, at the age of about sixty-six.

[4] William Withington, of Newport, was a carpenter. His name is merely noted by Savage as being on the list of freemen in 1655. The name occurs several times in the Note-book.

[120] I John Winthrop Esqr. Governor of the Mattachusetts Bay in New England doe hereby Certify unto all manner of persons whatsoever whome it may concerne that Isaacke Allerton merchant hath no visible estate reall or personall heere in this Jurisdiction or Country for the present to my knowledge and yet I am well acquainted wth him & his trade & dealings in this Country And thus much I have thought good at the request of M^{r} Thomas Allyn to testify in witnesse whereof I have caused the Common seale of our Colony to be hereunto affixed the 26th day of Sept. Anno Dmi 1639. [1*s.*]

Isaacke Allerton of New Plimmouth in New England merchant aged about 53 yeares sworne saith that the ship White Angell was heretofore in the yeare of our Lord 1631 bought at Bristoll of Alderman Aldworth by this deponent to the use of M^{r} James Sherley M^{r} Richard Andrewes M^{r} John Beauchamp of London merchants[1] M^{r} Timothy Hatherley then of London feltmaker

[1] Shirley, Andrews, and Beauchamp were the London merchants to whom the Plymouth people looked for support and aid; they were their business correspon-

& this deponent, but this deponent saith that the said Timothy Hatherley did afterwards refuse to accept of the said bargaine. And this deponent saith that the ship Frendship was heretofore hired & victualled by this deponent in the yeare aforesaid for the use of the said Mr Sherley Mr Andrews Mr Beauchampe Mr Hatherley and all the partners & purchasers of the plantation of Plimmouth aforesaid. And further this deponent saith that afterwards divers losses falling out upon the said ship Friendship the said Mr Hatherley and this deponent did in the behalf of themselves & the said Mr Sherley Mr Andrews & Mr Beauchampe agree & undertake to discharge & save harmlesse all the rest of the said partners & purchasers of & from the said losses for two hundred pounds.[1] [1*s*.]

dents. The business affairs of the Plymouth Colony with these merchants, as conducted by Allerton, form a great part of the subject-matter of Bradford's History, which must be read by any one who would entirely understand these matters.

[1] There is not here space enough to go at length into the transactions alluded to in this case. Isaac Allerton, the business man of the Plymouth Colony for many years, in 1631 surprised and grieved his New England friends by bringing across the Atlantic these two ships, the "White Angel," a trading vessel, and a fishing ship, the "Friendship." The following is from a letter from James Shirley to his Plymouth partners: —

"Gentle-men, partners, and loving friends, &c., — Breefly thus: we have this year set forth a fishing ship and a trading ship, which later we have bought; and so have disbursed a greate deale of money, as may and will appear by ye accounts. And because this ship (called ye White Angell) is to acte 2. parts, (as I may say,) fishing for bass, and trading; and that while Mr Allerton was imployed about ye trading, the fishing might suffer by carelesnes or neglecte of ye sailors, we have entreated your and our loving friend Mr Hatherley, to goe over with him, knowing he will be a comfort to Mr Allerton, a joye to you, to see a carefull and loving friend, and a great stay to ye bussines."

Upon which Bradford comments as follows: —

"It needs not be thought strange that these things should amaze and trouble them; first, that this fishing ship should be set out . . . And now a ship to come on their accounte, clean contrary to their both end & order, was a misterie they could not understand; and so much ye worse, seeing she had shuch ill success as to lose both her voiage and provissions. The 2. thing, that another ship should be bought and sent oute on newe designes, a thing not so much as once thought on by any here, much less, not a word intimated or spoaken of by any here, either by word or letter, neither could they imagine why this should be. Bass fishing was never lookt at by them, but as soon as ever they heard on it, they looked at it as a vaine thing, that would certainly turn to loss. . . . At length Mr Hatherley & Mr Allerton came unto them, (after they had delivered their goods,) and finding them strucken with some sadness aboute these things, Mr Allerton tould them that ye ship Whit. Angell did not belong to them, nor their accounte, neither neede they have anything to do with her excepte they would" (Bradford, 270 et seq.).

[1] David Offley, of whom we have heard before, was of Boston, and had a house and garden on what is now Essex Street, near Chauncy. He was a member of the Artillery Company. Removed to Plymouth 1643, says Savage, for which see Plymouth Colony Records, ii. 57; but the date of the Book of Possessions (F. 106, p. 87) being some years later than this, I suppose that he moved back again, as Savage inferred. He is not mentioned in the Town Records after 1639; but that does not prove that he did not live in the town, for he might have been both unimportant and inoffensive.

[2] Mr. John Stratton, of Salem, is a man of whom we hear more later on a different subject. He came to Salem from Scarborough, where he was as early as 1633, and is supposed to have moved to Easthampton, L. I., about 1643. He is mentioned several times in the Colonial Records, in various ways, — once as being fined for lending a gun to an Indian; again, as helping to run the line three miles north of the Merrimac. For a continuation of this particular case, see post, p. 126.

[3] Adam Winthrop, fifth son of John Winthrop, came over in the "Lion" 1631; married Elizabeth, daughter of Mrs. Glover, of whom mention has already been made, and with her lived on Governor's Island, in the Harbor. He died Aug. 24, 1652.

[1] Edward How, of Watertown, was "freeman May 14, 1634, ruling elder, often selectman, and representative." Died June 24, 1644. Henry Jackson, though not often mentioned, is known to have been a lessee of a fishing weir there, and is thought to have moved to Fairfield, where he had some estate.

[1] These three names are in the same way appended as witnesses to a letter of attorney, a few pages farther on, from this Mrs. Glover to Joseph Davis and Thomas Hawkins. Mr. Bellingham was at this time an assistant. Thomas Hawkins, usually called Captain Hawkins by Winthrop, was originally of London, though he owned land in Charlestown, and lived in Boston and in Dorchester for some years, and was a deputy from the latter place. His business was that of a shipwright, but he was also a merchant, and part-owner of many vessels. He was to some extent mixed up in the D'Aulnay and De La Tour complication, which we can hardly touch here. He is several times mentioned in Winthrop. Savage, in his notes, supposes him to have died abroad (in 1648), — which is likely enough, as he passed the greater part of his time on the water, and was quite as likely to be in London as in Dorchester. At the time of his death he owned property in Dorchester and Boston. He had business connections with Captain Edward Gibbons, of which we find notice post, p. 213. Nehemiah Bourne was a Charlestown shipbuilder. He also lived at Dorchester for some time, and a year or two after this moved to Boston. In 1644 he went to England, as major of the regiment of which Israel Stoughton was lieutenant-colonel. He is said to have commanded a ship-of-war under the Parliament. He came back again to Boston, but returned to England, and died in 1691. See Hist. and Geneal. Reg., xxvii. 26–36.

[1] Here are more of the arrangements of Thomas Watson purposing to return to England. Stephen Tracy, his attorney, had been in New England for a long time, having come to Plymouth in 1623. He did not, however, remain in the country, but went home to England in 1655. John Grey and his wife, it may be remembered, sold their house in Lynn to Valentine Hill. Savage calls the [illegible] of John Grey the Widow Elizabeth [illegible] was probably step-mother of Anna Watson. The others are more difficult to identify. John Groome, who was to pay 20*s.* to himself when he came over, never did come over that I know of. It may be that he transacted the business with Thomas Watson when he met him in England. John Barker, it is recorded, moved to Marshfield from Duxbury 1638, and was drowned 1652. The names of John Moore and Thomas Goodman are not found elsewhere.

He was once before this, in 1635, punished by a fine of £5 (which was remitted him, by the way). Whether he were ever pardoned I do not know. In 1647 he was still living at Pascattaquay, with certain associates, "in a most ryotous, mutinus & turbulent maner." He died in 1663. The full text of the petition is given in the course of a page or two.

[1] Mr. Samuel Shepard was one of the prominent citizens of Cambridge. He came over in 1635 from London, and became a member of the church under his brother, the Rev. Thomas Shepard. He returned to England some time after this, and served in Ireland in the Civil War. Nathaniel Eaton, of Cambridge, was the brother of Governor Eaton of Connecticut, and was first head of Harvard College (though not called president). He fell into disgrace in Massachusetts on account of his treatment of one Brisco, a scholar; and, on being censured by the court, he fled to Pascattaquay, and thence to Virginia, where, according to Winthrop, he spent the greater part of his time in a state of intoxication,—which, it would seem, was the custom of the country at that time. He finally went home to England, and there died. There is much about Eaton in the Note-book after his flight, but unfortunately no allusion to his cruelty to Brisco. The whole story is told in Winthrop at great length (i. 308, 313). There is also in Winthrop a note by Savage regarding the manner in which the scholars were treated, in connection with which it may be interesting to compare the Note-book, p. 201, post, in regard to Samuel Hough, one of Eaton's scholars.

[1] I believe all these persons to be at this time in England. The names of Golston, Newton Mather, Stephen Gostlin, are not to be found in Savage's Dictionary, while it seems impossible to identify Martha Hancock, Cousin Herbert, and Robert Hancock on the slight information here given. It is curious that so marked a name as Mather should appear with the unknown Christian name of Newton. Mr. Richard Mather, the father of Increase, was at this time in America with his sons, the eldest of whom was thirteen years old. It may be that Newton Mather was related to him. I have not come across the name in reading the Magnalia, nor indeed anywhere save here. The omission of any place of residence would lead one to doubt their being in New England at this time.

[2] This name is mentioned four times in the Note-book, and each time in so cursory a manner that speculations as to the identity are almost useless. First, Henry Gray is spoken of (ante, p. 47) as an honest young man with a brother who is a citizen of London. In this place Henry Gray was formerly a citizen and merchant of London himself. The next mention (p. 141) is in a bill of exchange drawn by his brother William Gray on Jeremiah White, of Plymouth; and, lastly (p. 176), there is a deed of a house from one Henry Gray of Boston to Thomas Lechford. In the Boston

Town Records is mention of Henry Gray, a tailor. Besides this, Savage mentions Henry Gray, Fairfield, 1643, with wife Lydia. Otherwise, I find no mention of Grays or Greys either. Mr. Trumbull thinks that there was but one Henry Grey, a tailor of London and afterward of Boston, who had a wife Lydia. He calls John Grey (ante, p. 122) and Henry Grey brothers, and supposes their wives to be Elizabeth and Lydia, daughters of William Frost, of Nottingham. See Conn. Col. Rec., i. 465, and Lechford's Plaine Dealing, p. 101 (Trumbull's ed.). As for George Spencer, there is mention of one of his name being punished for receiving stolen goods (Mass. Col. Rec., i. 203).

[1] This is the last mention of Thomas Watson, who probably did sail for England as he purposed; though whether he ever reached the country in safety we can hardly be sure. To the facts stated about those indebted to him I regret that I can add nothing. I have learned nothing of them, nor of John Stevens, — a name which occurs frequently in Savage.

[1] Mr. Harlowe may have been the young man (mentioned by Savage as a means of introducing his three wives and thirteen children) who had been living at Lynn, but was now at Sandwich or Plymouth. More probably however he was in England.

[2] John Stedman, of Cambridge, came from England in the same year, and probably in the same ship, with the Rev. Josse Glover. He was often selectman of Cambridge, and in 1645, "on the town's request, he was established Ensign of the company there," says the Colonial Record. He died in 1693, being ninety-two years old.

[3] John Elford, of Salem, was in 1630 in trouble on an accusation of murder of one Thomas Puckett; but I cannot find out that the case was ever decided one way or another. He was excommunicated in 1639, says Savage, who classes him with "Roger Williams and other outcasts." He is called here "de Amstetodam," but the phrase was crossed out and "nuper de Salem" substituted. "Cl'ico" perhaps is short for Clerico. This would be naturally enough applied to the Rev. John White of Dorchester, England. [T.]

important. I take this one to be Mr. William Pierce, who came, in 1633, in the "Griffin" with John Cotton and Hooker and others (for whom see Winth., i. 109). The other man of the name was Captain William Pierce, a prominent merchant, of whom mention will be made later.

[1] I am sorry not to be able to place exactly the lot here referred to. Mr. Hawthorne was probably William Hathorn, who came in the "Arbella" with Winthrop, and moved to Salem about 1634. He was often a representative, and served as a captain or major in King Philip's War. Lieutenant Davenport was one of the earliest inhabitants of Salem, having come, in 1628, with Endicott. He was an ensign in 1634, and in 1636 was a lieutenant in the Pequot War. He was subsequently captain of the castle in Boston, where he had moved, and was killed by lightning in 1665. (For the letter of attorney, see ante, p. 121.)

[1] I cannot say who John Bourne is, but think that he is not mentioned by Savage. Possibly he never came over from England. Much is found in the Note-book in regard to transactions between Walter Blackburne and William Cheney, as well as the proceedings of Elizabeth Blackburne after her husband's departure for Europe. I suppose this house and land to be the same that he bought of Nicholas Parker (ante, p. 35). He moved into Boston after selling this house, and lived on Washington Street, about opposite the spot where the Old South Church now stands. This I infer from the deeds in Lechford (post, pp. 215, 216), in which Elizabeth Blackburne transfers this lot to Francis Lisle, barber (see also Suff. Deeds, i. 20). The lot may be found in the reprint of the Book of Possessions (F, 65, p. 83) with this note: "Walter Blackburne had his lot, which Elizabeth . . . sold in 1641 to Francis Lyle the barber." Blackburne's lot was said to be in the "Centry Field." Perhaps the site in the Book of Possessions could not come under this head; in which case I suppose there were two lots.

Knowe all men by these presents that we Yovawan Sachem of Pommanocc and Aswaw Sachem his wife ffor ten Coates of trading Cloath to us before the making hereof payd and delivered [130] by Lion Gardiner[3] Commander of the forte

[1] The spelling of this name seems clearly Derriford. I think however that the man must be Barnaby Dorryfalls, or Derrifall, who had a lot in Boston which is several times alluded to in the records. He was a servant of Coddington, came over in 1633, and lived at Braintree. His name is 155th on the list of members of the First Church.

[2] Which John Johnson of the seventeen mentioned in Savage this may be, I cannot tell, but suppose him to be Mr. John Johnson of Roxbury, from the title of respect applied to him. Mr. William Pincheon (or Pynchon, as the name is more commonly spelled), however, was widely known. He was an early member of the Company; and being already an assistant, came over in the fleet with Winthrop 1630. He settled in Roxbury, but in 1636 removed to the Connecticut River, where he founded the town of Springfield. He got into religious controversy with the authorities, however, in the year 1651, and returned to England, where he died 1662. His family remained in New England.

[3] Lion Gardiner was commander of the fort at Saybrook from the year 1635 till he moved to Long Island, where he lived until his death in 1663. The island here spoken of was called by him the Isle of Wight, but has since been called by his name. For his views on the Pequot war, throughout which he held Saybrook Fort, see his Relation, 3 Mass. Hist. Coll., iii. 131.

[1] The first four men may be supposed to have been the four Yorkshire men spoken of in the first entry of the Note-book. Mr. Cotton's lot was on Tremont Street, near Scollay Square, running back into what is now Pemberton Square (Book of Possessions, 111, H, 13).

[2] Samuel Hagborne of Roxbury may be found in Savage.

[3] Comfort Starr, of Duxbury, came to New England in 1635. He was chosen surgeon, in 1637, to go with the troops under Captain Patrick to the Pequot war. The party reached the scene of war just after Underhill and Mason had destroyed the Pequot fort. Starr removed from Duxbury to Boston some years after this (1643), and died Jan. 2, 1660. Edward Michelson is three times mentioned in Lechford; but otherwise I find little of him. He was marshal of the colony; and there is notice of his having been appointed marshal of the court, together with a statement of his fees (Mass. Col. Rec., i. 217), as well as mention of him as marshal two or three times, in the first book of Suff. Deeds. He was not a freeman. John Jones, of Concord, can hardly be the minister of that name, nor yet his son; but I know no other of that name there.

Roger Conant[3] of Salem in New England planter makes a letter of Attorney to M^{r} Thomas Weston merchant to receive

[1] Of Thomas Nicholls, of Hingham, it is stated that he married a wife and moved to Scituate, but shortly returned. Besides this I know nothing more of the various parties to this agreement, whatever may be inferred from p. 180 post. The name of William Cockerell occurs ante, p. 50.

[2] Cape Porpice (Lechford's method of spelling Porpoise) is in York County in Maine, and now forms the northeast boundary of Kennebunk Harbor. Hugh Peter, in spite of the fact of his being a minister of the Gospel, seems to have been something of a man of business as well. He is mentioned in the Colonial Records as being requested to import saltpetre from Holland; also as presenting a schedule of Robert Saltonstall's property to satisfy his creditors. Richard Saltonstall's affairs, however, did not, as a rule, terminate successfully; and it is to be hoped that this was an exception to the rule. Hugh Peter went back to England shortly after this in the same ship with Lechford himself. Matthew Cradock, although he never came to New England, had frequent grants of land there from the General Court, and evidently had many business enterprises there.

For convenience, I append here a few dates and facts. Richard Saltonstall, son of Sir Richard, was brought by his father in 1630. He had been a member of Emmanuel College, University of Cambridge. Shortly after arriving he went home to England, and did not come to New England again until 1635, when he brought his newly married wife and a daughter. He was representative in 1636 and 1637; assistant in 1637; returned to England again, 1649; was in Massachusetts for a few years, 1680; died in England 1694.

Cradock, a wealthy London merchant, was governor of the Massachusetts Company before the election of John Winthrop. He never came to New England, but was of great help to the colony. He was a member of the Long Parliament. He died May 27, 1641.

Plymouth first, and then at many other places before settling at Salem. He was appointed governor of the Dorchester plantation, which was projected in 1625. He was several times deputy, was assistant at the court at Salem, and so forth. He died 1679. Thomas Weston was now a merchant of London, and had been in the country only once, — for a year or two, about 1623, at Weymouth, where he had undertaken to plant a colony, which was unsuccessful.

[1] William Townsend lived on Washington Street a little north of Winter (Book of Possessions, p. 84, F, 72). Gridley himself lived on the north side of Summer Street, by the water, not far from what is now Federal Street. Any readers, therefore, who are interested in the somewhat pathetic wanderings of this Jack-of-all-trades of a William Boreman, may imagine his journey to his new master whenever they walk up Summer Street. As for Townsend, he was one of those respectable persons who, because they do not figure prominently in town records and such like, either as notables or criminals, are forgotten by posterity. He was a worthy man, I should judge, even though he was forced to deliver up his arms to Captain Robert Keayne, with fifty-seven other citizens who, like himself, had been seduced and led into dangerous errors by our friends Mr. Wheelwright and Mistress Anne Hutchinson.

[2] Martin Stebbins was a brewer of Roxbury. He subsequently moved into Boston, where he continued. The Boston Town Records have notice of him several times, but never, save once, in regard to anything except beer.

[1] William Robinson, of Dorchester, is continually mentioned in the records of that town, where he was a well-known citizen. He came over in 1636, and was admitted freeman 1642.

[2] The place and time of the birth and death of Roger Ludlow are unknown. He was chosen assistant, Feb. 10, 1630; came to New England in May of the same year, and settled in Dorchester. He was in 1634 made deputy-governor, and in 1635 removed to Windsor, Conn., and thence (1639) to Fairfield. [1] Thomas Martin moved to Cambridge, and thence may have moved to New London. Solomon Saffery is said by Savage, on Hutchinson's authority, to have been a mathematician, who assisted Nathaniel Woodward to run the south line of the Colony. He is nowhere else mentioned that I know of.

[2] Thomas Witherle. I think this name is Witherly, as it is so spelled later in the Note-book. Thomas Witherly was fined for contempt (Mass. Col. Rec., i. 261); but the name is not to be found in Savage, who gives Wetherell, which he says is the same as Witherly, but no Thomas. Or is this Thomas Witherly a Connecticut man, as appears later (p. 189 post), to whom that rolling stone, William Boreman, is finally intrusted (p. 142 post)? See also p. 158 post, where he is called of Southwark, Co. Surrey.

[3] The name of Edward Heale occurs several times in the Note-book, sometimes being spelled Hele, and sometimes Heale. Savage calls it Healey, or Haley, sometimes Hale, Hele, or Heale, the same name. Nevertheless, there is no Edward among them all. From the mention of Edward Hele, of Bristol, later in the Note-book, I am led to think that if the two names (Heale and Hele) refer to the same person, this person was an English merchant who never remained in the country for any length of time, if, indeed, he was ever there. It is very possible that he may have had a correspondent in Virginia, and may have passed some time in that part of the country.

[1] Leonard Butters, or Buttolph, was the bricklayer, mason, and lime-burner already spoken of. As to John Pierce, he may be the bricklayer of that name of Boston (1670), or his father, or some relative. In regard to the work about the castle, I quote from the Colonial Records of the date June 6, 1639, vol. i. p. 260 : —

[1] Neither Ralfe Scott nor Jonathan Weymouth is to be found in Savage.

[2] David Sellecke, soap-boiler, is twice mentioned in an unimportant manner in the Dorchester Town Records. He is called of Boston by Savage, who says he died in Virginia in 1654. Savage is somewhat confused in his account of the various John Bakers; but he must be right when he says that "one was of Ipswich, perhaps he who was born at Norwich, County of Norfolk, a grocer, that came in 1637, aged thirty-nine, to Boston in the 'Rose of Yarmouth,' with Elizabeth, his wife," etc. Francis Hudson, the fisherman and ferryman, was said to be one of the first to set foot on the peninsula of Boston. I am not certain as to the position of his house here referred to. He had leave (Feb. 28, 1652) "to wharfe Befor his own ground near the Ferry at Charlestown." But in the Book of Possessions his house is put down somewhere near Gallup's Point (on Hanover Street). There is a difference between the dates of these two entries of seven or eight years, so it is possible that the latter is here referred to. But Hudson's name is always connected with the other side of the peninsula, — that opposite Charlestown. Hudson's Point, named from him, is at the foot of Copp's Hill; and it was on this side of the town that the ferries from Charlestown and Winnisimmet reached Boston; and it was here, I should think, that Hudson's house was likely to be. He had lease of the ferry toward the end of his life, and died Nov. 3, 1700.

[1] William Brackenbury was a baker by trade. He was apparently a public-spirited man as well, for he had served as constable for Charlestown a year or two before this. He subsequently moved to Malden, where he was for some time selectman, and died August, 1668. The name, by the way, often appears spelled Brankenbury. Little is known of Edward Wood which cannot be inferred from this passage. The house spoken of faced the Market Place in Charlestown, and extended back eastward to the marsh by Wapping Dock (Wyman's Charlestown). Joseph Hills, who lived on one side of this house, was a woollendraper from Malden in England, and his sons and grandsons lived in Malden here. Mrs. Higginson was Ann, the wife of the Rev. Francis Higginson, of Salem (who died in August, 1630). She had moved to New Haven, where she died in 1640.

If we trust Lechford, and take the passage to mean only two sons, as is most natural, George Cooke cannot be the brother of Thomas Cooke, as stated by Savage; he may be a cousin, or some more distant relative.

[1] Arthur Brown, of Casco, and later of Winnegansett (post, p. 219), I suppose to be Arthur Browne, Saco, 1636, noted by Savage.

[2] William Sargent and his wife Sarah are both mentioned by Savage, who knows but little else that is now pertinent except the fact here certified to by Winthrop.

[3] Morris was captain of I know not what, but frequently has the title given him after this entry. William Peirce was a Boston sea-captain, of whom very frequent mention is found in Winthrop and elsewhere. He is said to have made more voyages to and from Boston than had any other in the same years. He was the compiler of "an almanac made for New England" (Winth., i. 289), which was the first thing after the Freeman's Oath (probably only a broadside), printed at the press at Cambridge by Stephen Day, the partner of the Rev. Josse Glover, as has been already noted above. Captain Peirce was killed in the West Indies by the Spaniards some two years after this date, as may be read in Winthrop (ii. 33).

[1] Nicholas Trerise (the name is spelled in many ways) had been captain of the "Planter" five years before, when that ship came from London, and lived in Charlestown. Thence he moved to Woburn. Of the members of this Company, headed by Mr. Samuel Maverick, I can hardly form a conjecture. In regard to the "Planter," the following may interest the curious: In 1646 Monsieur de la Tour hired of Samuel Maverick, who acted for Sir David Kirke and partners, "a certain vessel called the plan [ter], burden thirty fyve tunns of there about, for a voyage in her to be made vppon the coast of Lacadie" (Suff. Deeds, i. f. 75). This is nothing more, however, than a coincidence in names and numbers. The "Planter" in which Trerise commanded could hardly be of less than three hundred and fifty tons burden; and the "Planter" of thirty-five tons, let to La Tour, is called a pinnace by Winthrop. Those anxious to make out the connection, as I am, may please themselves by imagining that the smaller boat was some sort of tender or longboat of the larger, of which Maverick had become possessed. Another reference is in a deposition of Maverick (3 Mass. Hist. Soc., vii. 116), in which the "Barque 'Planter'" is spoken of as La Tour's ship. In the Massachusetts Colonial Record (iii. 226) there is mention of a ship "Planter" in connection with Edward Bendall and William Aspinwall, which may or may not have had some connection with the two here mentioned. The year is 1651, six years after the deed to La Tour. The name "Planter" was probably a common one, however, and nothing can be really inferred from it.

the house of the Rev. John Wilson and opposite that of Captain Robert Keayne, who lived on the southeast corner. These three houses were on the open Market Place, where the Old State House was afterwards built, while just across Washington Street was built, a year or two later, the Meeting-House. At this time the Meeting-House was on the south side of State Street, some few steps below Robert Keayne's (Book of Possessions, G. 60, 64, 81, 84, 85, pp. 98–103).

[1] John Hansett, called in the church record "servant of our pastor, John Wilson," moved after this to Braintree, — where he may have lived on Wilson's land there, or acted as overseer, — and again to Roxbury, and died in 1684. John Evered, as well as Stephen Evered (perhaps his brother), always appears as "alias Webb," and later in the Note-book as "Webb als [blank]," (p. 224). He came from Wiltshire, where, according to Savage, Webb is a common name; went to Chelmsford, and then to Dracut, and died in 1668. This I get from Savage. But he bought in 1658 the house of Richard Hutchinson, of London, with the ground whereon the Old Corner Bookstore now stands. He sold the property, or a part of it, in 1661 (Shurtleff's Boston, p. 675). This, I suppose, was just before his removal to Chelmsford, where he was representative 1663–1665. The garden, of half an acre or thereabouts, is easily identified. It was on the east side of Washington Street, south of Milk Street. [Savage thought it might be "unavailing to ask why this family is described in all the records by a double surname." A fact mentioned in Fuller's Church History (p. 110) suggests a probable answer. In the reign of Edward III. many Dutch tradesmen emigrated to England from the Netherlands; and "I am informed," says Fuller, "that a prime Dutch clothmaker in Glocestershire had

T.] The lot is in the Book of Possessions (p. 81, F, 49), standing in the name of Edward Fletcher. It has the same abutters, except Nathaniel Bishop, instead of Nicholas Parker. Bishop's lot (in 1645, or thereabouts) was immediately between Fletcher's and Parker's, and it is probable that he purchased it after the date of this grant.

[1] Richard Carter, of Boston, is generally called a carpenter. He had a house, bought just about this time, of William Hudson, Jr., on the west side of Washington Street, near Boylston Street, then well out in the suburbs. Of Matling Knight, I find mention several times in the Town Record and elsewhere. He was admitted townsman March 31, 1645, and was appointed fence-viewer at Muddy River in 1653. There are other unimportant references to him and to his house, which, I think, was somewhere in the region of Scollay Square, near the corner of Hanover and Washington streets; though I am not certain of it, for he has no land in the Book of Possessions (Boston Town Records, i. 114; Book of Possessions, p. 111; H. 11).

[2] The land here spoken of is the great allotment made in 1637 to Mr. Henry Vane (Town Records, i. 27), which by this time had come into the possession of Nicholas Parker. Here see p. 141, post, and note thereon. As for Edward Bendall, it was one of his avocations to keep the ferry over to Noddles Island and to the ships riding before the town. But it is likely enough that he had a "great lighter" on purpose to do such work as the present. There is much in Lechford, which the careful reader will remember, on the subject of a great lighter owned by Richard Parker and Edward Bendall, and managed by one Thomas Hedger. But I cannot say that that must be the same lighter as the one here referred to. The question of lighters becomes more involved on the inspection of these extracts (dates and all) from the Colonial Record (i. 165, 181), March 3, 1635–1636: "Ordered, that there shall be xx^{l} gyven Edward Bendal out of the treasury towards the loss of his lighter;" and October 25, 1636: "Whereas Edward Bendall had 20^{l} yielded toward the loss of the lighter and that the lighter was recovered the Court allowed him 12^{l} out of the 20^{l} w^{ch} he should have had, if it had been lost towards his charge & hindrance."

[1] Tobyas Feke is not noted in Savage, and so I suppose is not heard of again in New England. William Palmer was brought to Plymouth by his father, of the same name, in 1621. When married (in 1634), he lived at Scituate, and afterward at Yarmouth. Savage says he moved to Yarmouth "before 1643," which we may amend to "before 1639." He became a lieutenant later, and died in Newtown, L. I., before 1661.

[2] The appearance of the names of James Luxford and John Winthrop recalls the frequent mention of the "unfaithfulness of my servant Luxford" in the Winthrop Papers (4 Mass. Hist. Coll. vi. & vii. passim). It is curious that the two should have been together at this time, for it must have been very close upon the time of Luxford's breach with Winthrop. Hugh Peters says: "James Luxford was at Saugust when I came by. I have layd out for him." This is in a letter evidently written after Winthrop's misfortunes, dated Salem, Dec. 26, 1639 (4 Mass. Hist. Coll. vii. 202). James Luxford is also noticed in the Colonial Record as having two wives, and being punished for the same (i. 245, 283, 295).

[3] The trial of Marmaduke Pierce for the murder of his servant is related shortly by Winthrop (i. 319), from whom, and also from the Colonial Record, I take these facts. He was first accused Sept. 3, 1639; but the matter not seeming quite clear, it was put off till the next Quarter Court to be tried. At this trial the jury could not agree, and the case was continued, Pierce being let out on bail. This deposition in Lechford was sworn to on December 3 of that year, and, with this additional evidence and perhaps more that we know nothing of, the case was tried December 3, and the jury rendered a verdict of "not guilty." Winthrop says that two of the jury dissented. Pierce was not finally discharged until March of the next year.

Whitered is only mentioned in Lechford (in the next entry), and is not found anywhere else that I know of, nor can I find any other connection than this paper between either of the parties to the agreement and any of the witnesses. Indeed, I know not if the Thomas Burton here mentioned be Thomas Burton of Hingham, whom I find in Savage, or not, having nothing to guide me. The "widdowe halfield" I take to be the relict of Richard Haffee, or Haffield, of Ipswich, who came in 1635 with his wife Martha, and whose will has date Feb. 17, 1639.

[2] This land was given to Winthrop Jan. 8, 1637–1638 [Boston Record, i. 27], in the portioning of the great allotments at Rumney Marsh from the town of Boston. The first name in the allotment is "Mr. Henry Vane, Esq.," who received two hundred acres, which, as will be remembered, were now in the possession of Nicholas Parker. The next name is that of John Winthrop, the elder, who received one hundred and fifty acres, described precisely as above, with one exception, — the name of Mr. Vane stands in the Town Record, while "Nicholas Parker sometimes M^r Vane's" is in Lechford. The third name is that of James Penn, above mentioned, who had fifty acres. The fourth name on the list is that of John Newgate aforesaid, who received one hundred and twelve acres.

[3] Concerning these and other Greys, there is much confusion. Savage mentions no William Grey, and this mention of his brother Henry is too vague for identification.

Savage says: "Salem 1637 when with grant of land he had the prefix of respect, yet abandoned the country in 1642, and ten years later not being heard of, his wife Dorothy had leave to marry again."

something more than 11*s*. an acre. The difference, however, was only about sixpence an acre. Edward Tyng, a Boston merchant, "early wrote himself brewer," says Savage, as we shall see later (see post, p. 144). He was a man of great influence in the Colony, as was also his elder brother William, of whom Lechford makes frequent mention. He lived to an old age and died in 1681. He had two sons and several daughters. Of these last, Hannah married Habijah Savage, son of Thomas Savage, and at his death, Major-General Gookin; Deliverance married Daniel Searle; Rebecca, Joseph Dudley, afterwards governor; and Eunice, Samuel Willard, Vice-President of Harvard College.

[1] Of Thomas Cornell little is known. He is said to have removed, in 1654, to Rhode Island, where he was freeman in 1655. Job Judkin must have received William Boreman from William Townshend of Boston, thatcher, to whom, the reader may remember, Boreman was intrusted by Richard Gridley. Either Boreman was apt at the learning of trades, or his character may be inferred from his name. He makes four changes in the course of six months, thus experiencing four trades, each of which requires six years completely to master it. This transfer to Thomas Witherly removes him from Lechford. I suspect that he went to Wethersfield, Connecticut (see ante, p. 105, note). Of Job Judkin nothing is known except the names (and dates of the birth and death) of his wife and five children, for which the inquiring reader may consult Savage.

[2] Timothy Hawkins I suppose to be the carpenter of that name mentioned later in Lechford. He was, I believe, of Watertown; but I can find but little mention of him, except in the Colonial Record (i. 112, 244), where he is fined for selling (and drinking) strong water. I do not think he was ever freeman of the Colony.

[3] Thomas Burton (perhaps the one mentioned ante, p. 140) may have been the man of that name who, with others, became obnoxious to the General Court on account of his views on government. There is little for or against this theory, except that I can find no other of the name, and think it likely that Lechford would have had some dealings with the agitator if he were at this time in Boston (see Winth., ii. 262, 302).

[1] Nathaniel Heaton was of Boston as early as 1634. He died shortly after this date (about 1644 or 1645, I should say), and his wife Eliza married successively two husbands, both of whom she survived.

[2] John Hurd, the tailor, had his house and garden on Washington Street, between Summer and Bedford. His shop may have been there too; but I think from some words in the Town Record that it was somewhere north of the Town Dock. [The Town Record says (vol. i. p. 101): "M^{r} Glover and Brother Burden hath set unto them the ground before their proprietyes, so Fare as from the Corner of M^{r} Webs house to the Corner of Goodman Hurds Shop upon a streight line." Glover and Burden lived next each other on the north side of Dock Square, being then directly on the water, opposite the Town Dock. There is, however, no mention of either Webb or Hurd in the neighborhood, nor of Glover and Burden living beside each other, as this extract would seem to imply they did, in any other part of the town. But it seems to me that this was not an unlikely place for a tailor's shop. Thomas Savage the tailor and John Newgate the hatter had shops in Edward Gibbons's house, nearly opposite, and George Burden, just mentioned, was a shoemaker. These last facts are from the Book of Possessions, which was compiled between 1645 and 1650, while the date of the extract from the Town Record is March 31, 1651.]

[3] "Great indulgence," says Savage, "in speaking of Thomas Marshall the ferryman, must be granted to investigat. a. this name, for ano. Thomas, Boston 1643." There are, also, two other Thomas Marshalls of date near enough to this, one of Reading and one of Dorchester. Every one of these four had a wife at this time, so we get small help from that quarter. Nevertheless, I think that the one here mentioned is the Thomas Marshall who kept the ferry to Charlestown, and it is not unlikely that he brought the wood from some of the lots at Rumney Marsh in which we have interested ourselves just above. If this be the man, like many more of Lechford's friends he had been disfranchised and disarmed in the Wheelwright times, but afterwards rose to some distinction in the town history.

[1] Zaccheus, or Zachariah, Bosworth was early of Boston, and may have come with Winthrop. In the Town Records, where he is once or twice mentioned, he goes by the name of "Zackie" or "Zache," as though nobody was very sure as to which Christian name was in right his. His name, or nickname, is found in the list of those disarmed in 1637, and also in that of the richer inhabitants who contributed the year before to the support of Daniel Maude as schoolmaster. We have often had occasion to refer to these lists, and shall undoubtedly again; for almost every Boston man mentioned by Lechford figures in one or other of them, — as is indeed most natural.

[1] David Offley. See note, p. 104, ante.

[2] I think this is the first mention of Captain Edward Gibbons in Lechford. He is too well known to make it necessary to insert in this place any description of his life, but a few dates may be some help to the reader's memory. He was with Morton, of Merrymount, before the settlement of the town of Boston, and lived in Salem 1629, some little time before moving to Boston. In Salem he became converted from whatever Mortonism he may have had, and became freeman early in 1631, his name being in the first list of those admitted. He shortly afterwards moved to Boston, where he became one of the most prominent citizens. In Colony matters he was also forward, being almost continually deputy from Boston between 1634 and 1644. He was always employed in any enterprise relating to military matters, both by the town and the Colony.

[2—6. r. 1*s.*]

In 1636 he was chosen lieutenant for Boston, the redoubtable John Underhill being captain, and Robert Harding ensign. He had been ensign to Underhill for two years. In 1637 he was in the Artillery Company, and in 1641 was its captain, as well as twice in later years. In 1649 he was made major-general of all the Massachusetts forces, and in 1650 was made assistant. He died Dec. 9, 1654. He had been possessed of considerable fortune, but had probably suffered large losses towards the end of his life, having been mixed up in the La Tour complications, and being on the whole rather more adventurous than steady-going as a merchant.

As for Webcowites (or Webba Cowet, as it is sometimes written) and the "Squa Sachem" of Misticke, they were both well known among the friendly sachems. It was with the desire of treating with the "Squa Sachem" that Miles Standish made his explorations about Boston some nine years before the town was settled. She lived on good terms with the Colonists, bartering land with them, and receiving a "coate" each winter from the town of Cambridge, as well as corn from the same town (which did not supply these small luxuries regularly without some orders from the General Court). This deed in Lechford may be found (with some small differences in text) in Suff. Deeds, L, 1, f. 43, — entered in the year 1643. The "Squa Sachem" made her sign (a bow and arrow) first, and Webcowites second. Webcowites was her second husband, and had formerly been only medicine-man. Jotham Gibbons was at this time about six years old.

Articles of agreement[4] betweene M^{r} John Wilson Pastor of the Church of Boston & Richard Wright 1. 3. 1639. [6*s.*]

[1] I do not find this petition mentioned in the Colonial Record. Critchley was a blacksmith who lived on Court Street (where S. S. Pierce has had his store so many years). His wife was Alice, the widow of William Dinely and mother of Fathergone Dinely, born after the death of her husband. The house and land belonged to the heirs, and was held for them by Critchley.

[2] Bowen I cannot find any trace of.

[3] Mr. Thomas Mayhew was at this time living at Watertown. He did not move to Martha's Vineyard until 1647.

[4] These articles of agreement I suppose to be on some subject connected with Mr. Wilson's land at Braintree, which was granted to him in 1634 in exchange for land which he held at Mystic. Richard Wright was of Boston about this time; but as he is always mentioned in connection with affairs at Mount Wollaston, I do not think that he lived in the city at all, but rather on his farm. He has no land in the Book of Possessions five or six years later than this date, though his land is mentioned as bounding an estate at Mount Wollaston.

Borrowed of Mr. Blackborne to pay Mr. Micklethwayt for house roome 2l 10*s*. 1. 9. 1639 to be repayd in a moneth & I payd Mr. Micklethwayt the same for wch I have his receipt. &c. [payd.]

Articles of agreement betweene Mr. John Cogan & Thomas Stocker[2] 2. 12. 1640. &c. [5*s*.]

Copy of the freemens oath to goodman Shrimpton.[3] [6*d*.]

[1] James Penn came in the fleet with Winthrop, and held several offices in Church and State before his death, in 1671. The house "sometimes a brew-house" is down in the Book of Possessions in the name of Edward Tyng, who sold it in 1651 to James Everill. It was on the north side of State Street. The highway mentioned is now Merchants' Row, and the south side of Faneuil Hall Square. The highway I suppose led along the shore end of the wharves. On the way up to what is now Washington Street (through Dock Square) from this wharf, comes first a house of Valentine Hill's (whether he had a wharf or not, I cannot say), and then, after Isaac Grosse, is the stone house and warehouse of Edward Bendall, on the corner of Exchange Row with the wharf spoken of. On the highway (beyond Exchange Row) came George Foxcroft, Robert Nash, the butcher (who was in the habit apparently of killing beasts on this very street until warned by the selectmen), and William Franklin, blacksmith. Beyond Wilson's lane (now Devonshire Street) was John Wilson's property, running back from State Street, and on the corner of Washington Street was Major Edward Gibbons's house with two shops, one occupied by Thomas Savage, and the other by John Newgate.

[2] Of Stocker I find no mention before 1651. Savage's remark is "Chelsea and Lynn, 1651, 1672," with some details as to his wife and children.

[3] Goodman Shrimpton I suppose is "Henry Shrimpton, a Brasyer . . . allowed to be an Inhabitant." 25. 1. 1639 (Boston Town Records, i. 40). As one of the few references to him in the Town Records mentions a fine of five pounds for refusing to serve as constable when elected, I think it by no means unlikely that he never cared to incumber himself with civic responsibility so far even as to take the freeman's oath. His name is not to be found in the list. His son Samuel, perhaps through filial reverence, some twenty years later refused to serve as constable, and paid a fine of ten pounds.

[1] We may find this case in the Mass. Records. The offence was committed about a year before, and Palmer was punished by a fine of £5, which was remitted to 10*s.* With a grim sense of humor not wholly foreign to the General Court, he was also set for an hour in these very stocks. He paid his fine of 10*s.* at the Court assembled on the date above (Mass. Col. Rec., i. 260, 291).

Releases & acquittances by Thomas Barker & Francis Lambert for themselves & John Johnsons children to M^{r} Thomas Savage 3. 14. 1640. [1*s.*]

[1] John Stubbin, of Watertown, is very vaguely heard from in various ways. Savage says he may have moved to New London, and mentions his wife and the time of his death. He never took the freeman's oath, but was probably admitted an inhabitant of Watertown.

[2] Thomas Richards, it will be remembered, had just moved from Dorchester to Weymouth (see p. 103, ante). He took the freeman's oath about this time (May 13, 1640), and it is possible that he may have taken the opportunity of a journey to Boston to make this bargain.

[3] Nicholas Butler was one of the more prominent inhabitants of Dorchester. He moved in 1651 to Martha's Vineyard.

[4] This lot of land was not the one spoken of above (p. 138), as may be seen by noticing the abutters. It was on the west side of Washington Street, north of West Street. It is in the Book of Possessions under the name of Thomas Clarke. I do not know exactly who this John Johnson may have been, though I suppose him to have been one of the "four Yorkshiremen" (ante, p. 1). If he were dead at this time, he had left a son of the same name (noted in Savage as "Rowley, 1650"), who was one of the children mentioned below. Thomas Barker and Francis Lambert were two of the Yorkshiremen spoken of; and altogether this business, I suppose, may have had some connection with the conveying of the house spoken of above, — though there is no mention of Punderson, who was now settled at New Haven.

[1] If this is the same date as the two entries above, Mr. Thomas Rucke had already taken the oath the day before.

[2] This land was granted him by the General Court Sept. 9, 1638. Whether it was laid out as he wished, I cannot say. I find no record of it in Wyman's Charlestown. Palmer was an influential man in his town, and had much to do with laying out the lands etc., and I suppose that the Court granted the petition. He was a merchant from London, who in 1628 was interested in the patent. He came over in 1629, and was made freeman 1630. He was later a representative, and served in the Pequot war. He was an active merchant, and died in London, 1651. See Savage and Wyman.

[1] George Alcocke was of Roxbury. He is often mentioned in the Colonial (and Roxbury) Records as being appointed to run lines, determine boundaries, etc. He had come in 1630 with Winthrop, had been admitted freeman the next year, and was representative several times. He died towards the end of 1640.

Dermondt Matthew[1] servant of George Strange gent complaines against his master for that whereas the said Matthew was to serve the said George from the 9th day of May 1639 for six yeares for the wages of foure pounds by the yeare and a pigg to be payd at every yeares end and in the end of the terme to have a Convenient lott for his service. He promised also the said servant three suits of apparel & six shirts. All w^{ch} appeares by an Indenture & sufficient witnesse.

The said George Strange hath not payd him any wages nor given him any clothes according to his bargaine. Also the said Dermondt Matthew did bind Teg Mathew his sonne a child of 9 yeares old apprentice to the said George Strange for ten yeares from the said 9th day of May wth Covenant to keepe him two yeares at school and the other eight he was to serve in the same house wth his ffather the said Dermondt Matthew. [1] Dermont Matthew and his son Teg are not met with in many of the contemporary authorities. The following from the Colonial Record (vol. ii. p. 20) is of date almost exactly two years after this entry: "Dearmont Mathewe was ordered to go home to his m^{r}, & if he can prove his m^{r} did beat him, when hee came home with order from M^{r} Deputy, his m^{r} to bee punished; if not hee is to recompence his m^{r} for damage done him, & losse of his time, & his master was willed for this time not to correct him." The careful reader must decide for himself if there be connection between these cases. Matthew died before 1661, for inventory of his estate (£112 1*s.* 4*d.*) is found with date Aug. 2, 1661 (Suff. Prob. Rec., 4. 88).

[1] Thomas Gray was always in trouble with the Government, both for his own behavior and for that of his friends, who gathered at his house at Marble Harbor (which seems even at that early time to have had something of the same reputation that it enjoys at the present day). He probably came over in 1626 with Roger Conant, perhaps before. He was banished from the jurisdiction of the Colony very early (1630), his house was ordered to be pulled down, and all persons were forbade giving him shelter. Nevertheless, he lived on at Marble Harbor, the winter being cold for a man with no house, and Governor Winthrop being indulgent (Winth., i. 85); so in 1638 the sentence of banishment was ordered to be carried into effect. He still remained, however, and the occasion of his drawing his knife in court seems to have been the wind-up of some debauch at his house. "Ralfe Wainner is fined 10 sh for being at excessive drinking at Thom: Grayes at Marble Head," and "Thom: Gray for being drunke, prophaning of the name of God, keeping a tipling house & drawing his knife in Courte was censured to be severely whiped & fined 5l," are the entries in the Record. There is one more entry recording a sentence for drunkenness, June 2, 1640, which may be before or after this petition. Otherwise his promise of good behavior seems to have been sincere, for he appears no more in a criminal or other capacity. He was still at Marblehead in 1648, says Savage.

It was at this court, where Thomas Gray drew his knife, that "Thomas Lechford, for going to the jewry & pleading w^th^ them out of Court," was "debarred from pleading any mans cause hereafter, unlesse his owne, & admonished not to presume to meddle beyond what he shall be called to by the Courte" (Mass. Coll. Rec., i. 276).

[2] The names of Deodatus Curtis and Thomas Brownell are both noted in 38l One house and one garden and six acres of arable land in Braintree aforesaid parcell of the lands heretofore of Edward Raynsford of Boston wth the appurtenances to him & his heires for ever.

[10*d.*]

Savage with little addition. I suppose that Brownell was selling his property preparatory to moving to Portsmouth, R. I., where he is mentioned, 1655, as freeman. Edward Raynsford was a well-known man in Boston. He came with Winthrop in 1630, and was a deacon and ruling elder in the church. He died in 1680.

[1] Thomas Oliver brought with him to this country, in 1632, two sons, John and James. I think that the Oliver here mentioned must be John, for he is the one of the two brothers who would be more likely to be called surveyor, having been on committees appointed to run lines or determine boundaries, while his brother James (this year made freeman) was a merchant, and would hardly, I think, be called surveyor. Of John Seavearne, tailor, little is known that will be of help here.

[2] Miles Brathwayte may have been a member of the church in the Isle of Providence, of the Bahamas, of which the unlucky end may be read in Johnson, bk. ii. ch. xx., and Winthrop, ii. 33. Richard Newton, who delivered the tobacco out of Goodman Sweete's cellar (in the Mill Field, I suppose, near Gallop's Point, Book of Possessions, 123, K, 3), may be one of the two men of that name who took the freeman's oath. Savage calls one of Sudbury, and mentions his wife and children; adding that he took the oath in 1645, and again, 1647, "for no other Richard is heard of." It is barely possible that this may be that "other Richard."

[1] George Luxon, who is mentioned several times in the pages following, was master of the "Fellowship," and was probably never in New England for any length of time. He appears in the Note-book generally as factor for some person or other. John Blackleach was a busy merchant of Salem. He moved, however, to Boston some time after this, and finally to Hartford.

[1] Of this John Johnson, fortunately more is known than of the Yorkshireman mentioned above. He was one of the substantial men of Roxbury, having come with Winthrop. He was often representative in the General Court. Joshua Hughes (the name is generally Hewes) was an active merchant of the same town. Thomas Lamb, also of Roxbury, came with his wife and children in the fleet with Winthrop. From the title of "gent," applied to William Perkins, I should infer that though a preacher, he had not yet been ordained a minister in this country. Savage says "minister, but where educated is unheard." I find in the Emmanuel Register at the English Cambridge, "1624. Wm. Perkins, Pensioner, A. B."

[2] I can add nothing further to explain this business. Hassard may be Thomas Hazard, the ship-carpenter of Boston, though he had by this time moved to Rhode Island.

[1] Savage notes John Pickering, of Portsmouth, 1635, of whom little is known, who may be the man. He is referred to again, p. 158, post. As for Allerton, he was doubtless well known all along the coast up to Machias, and it would be natural enough for a man at Pascattaquay to call on him for any such service as the one here spoken of. I hope he had better luck in searching for Price than I have had. Thomas Hawkins was of course a very different man from the merchant (p. 122, ante) of the same name. This man was at the time a baker, and later is said to have kept an inn.

[1] The Nicholas Willis here spoken of was a mercer by trade, and his house (and shop as well, I suppose) was just off Dock Square, on Union Street. He was, by the way, chairman of the jury in the trial of Marmaduke Pierce for murder, mentioned above.

[2] Griffith Bowen (also a juryman in the same trial) was a Welshman, who lived for a time in Roxbury, but finally returned to England. William Colbron and Jacob Eliott were both early settlers and well-known men in Boston, being deacons of the church there. Both were sympathizers with Mrs. Hutchinson, although the former was not disarmed nor disfranchised. The four merchants mentioned were, I suppose, Englishmen, though they may have been Virginians (p. 153, post).

[3] Inquiry as to John Downes "de Ponte Bondon in Como Cork" (p. 158, post), merely results in the following: "Bandon Bridge, a market town of Cork, on the River Bandon, 13 m. from Cork, and 136 from Dublin. This town was erected in 1610 in the midst of an impassable bog by Richard Boyle, Earl of Cork" (Capper's Dictionary of Great Britain). See post, p. 158.

[4] Of Nicholas Brooking I find no mention, and notice of John Morris is so vague as to be useless here.

[1] Mr. Deane's note on Allerton says: "From some evidence he would seem to have been a resident of New Amsterdam in 1643; and in a document recorded in the Old Colony Records, bearing date 27th October, 1646, he styles himself as 'of New Amsterdam in the province of New Netherlands'" (Bradford, p. 300, note). In 1642 his name is found among the "eight men" of New Amsterdam, looking curiously out of place among the strangely spelled names of his Dutch friends. Later it is signed (at Fort Nassau, 1651) to a declaration or certificate in regard to an Indian gift of land with others, mostly Dutch, as "Isaack Allerton, of Suffolk." [See Documents relating to the Colonial History of New York, i. 140, 191, 192, 597, 599.] Allerton died in New Haven Feb. 12, 1658.

A Case. A servant reteynes an Attorney in his Masters name & w^th^ his consent to sue R D for money due to the master for goods bought out of his shop by the said R D in w^ch^ suit the Attorney expendes money & p^r^secutes w^th^ effect. So The suit is upon Record betweene the said Master & the wards. Later he was chosen an assistant, and in 1665 was elected Deputy-Governor, which office he held until his death in 1671. It may be a stretch of imagination to suppose Captain Timothy Thornhill to be Captain Thomas Thornell, a transient resident, thinks Savage, who died 1660. William Hales I take to have been a Virginia planter; he was not a New Englander. These two men can hardly be identified. James Smith, of Weymouth, is merely noted by Savage, but nothing more.

The Question is although the servant did promise to pay the Attorney all due fees & charges in case he hath not p^{d} the same, whether the Attorney may not recover the said fees & charges at his election of either the said master or servant.

I conceive this case to be very cleare & that the master is bound both in Law & equity to pay the Attorneys bill. Jo. Winthrop 5. 25. 1640.

[1] Thomas Weston I suppose to be the London merchant who was interested in the planting of Weymouth in 1622. He is said to have died at Bristol, — I suppose at the storm of the town by Maurice and Rupert in 1643. No other person of the name is mentioned in the early history of New England. Thomas Barnardiston I know nothing of, and suppose from the fact that Lechford acts as attorney for him that he was at this time in England or Virginia.

Thomas Robinson of Boston marriner for 40 sells unto Thomas Witherley marriner One barke called the Speedwell[4]

[1] From the same kindly authority which gave me the whereabouts of "Ponte Bondon in Com Corke," I learn that Youghall is "a considerable seaport in the County of Cork, at the mouth of the Blackwater," some little way to the east of Cork Harbor.

[2] William Raynborowe (called of Charlestown, post, p. 164) must be a misspelling for William Rainsborough, of that town. Rainsborough lived some time in New England, but in 1645 he went to England to serve in the Civil War. He was himself made colonel, and had Israel Stoughton as his lieutenant-colonel, and Nehemiah Bourne as major. Other New Englanders who went with him were Mr. John Leverett, William Hudson the younger, and Francis Lisle the surgeon, of most of whom we have had mention in this book. Rainsborough is called in one of Winthrop's letters the brother of Stephen Winthrop. He was the brother of Judith, the wife of Stephen Winthrop. If Wyman is right, he was also his stepgrandfather, by the marriage of Martha Rainsborough Coytmore with Governor Winthrop. (See Wyman's Charlestown, and Winth., vol. ii. apx. A, 65).

[3] William Vicars may be the father of Thomas Vigars, of Hartford, born 1650. Savage offers the conjecture that the family was Dutch; but I find no trace of the name in any early papers relating to the New Netherlands that I have seen. William Quick, called a sailor (Suff. Deeds, i. f. 50), is noted at Newport, 1638, but seems by a later entry in the Note-book to be of Connecticut (pp. 182, 189, post).

[4] Whether the "Speedwell," of pilgrim fame, lasted out forty years after being sent back to London as unseaworthy, is a subject which may interest the curious. One Robert Corbin was master of the "Speedwell" 15 Aug., 1637 (Winth., ii. 348).

[2] Of Allen Yewe little seems to be known, save the fact that his name is spelled in a variety of ways. Continuations of this business may be found below (pp. 159, 164).

[1] John Davis, of Boston, joiner, came in the "Increase" in 1635, and was, I think, disarmed in 1637, with so many more of Lechford's clients. But the name John Davis is a confused one. There were two or three of the name (all joiners) about this time. William Herrick was of Southampton, L. I.

[2] Thomas Matson had been of Boston since Winthrop came over, — a gunsmith by trade and an early member of the church; freeman March 4, 1633. He moved to Braintree after the discomfiture of the Hutchinson party in 1637, with which he sympathized. Afterwards, says Savage, he became a military officer. Where Robert Turner's house was at this time I hardly know. He had what I suppose to be a pasture lot near what is now the corner of Franklin and Congress streets; but I think there was probably no house upon it. Later he bought of Valentine Hill a house on the west side of Washington Street, north of Court Street. It was across the street from Major Gibbons's [Bk. Possess., G, 44, p. 96].

And now, Worthy Sir, what news can I write you from us, but such as is heavy and sad, in every respect? Yesterday, being the 27th of July, a tall ship riding at anchor before Charlestowne, that brought hither provisions from Bristoll, called the Mary Rose,[1] was (most part) blown up with gunpowder which she had in her for defence, (and the rest sunke downe immediatelie,) through some careless rummaging with candle-light in the hold: wherein died a brave mariner Captaine Davis, with ten others, seamen, and two or three of the Country being then on boarde. Fourteen others of the ship's company being on shore, through the mercy of God escaped: I never heard such a fearful blow: it shook the house wherein I was being a mile off, as an earthquake. A sad and doleful accident, and much laid to heart by me. This was at one a clock in the afternoone. God of his mercy grant that we the living may lay it to heart and repent indeed, lest we all likewise perish!

[Margin: "This is not written"] I for my part, though I hear things are at an ill way in our native country, could yet wish myselfe there, or else in some other place of his Majestie's dominions, considering the errors and disorderlie proceedings we run into and persist in dayly here, as sheep without a shepherd. I know my friends desire to know whether I am yet of any better mind than some of my actions about the time of my coming away did show me to bee. I doe professe that I am of this mind and judgment, I thank God: that Christians cannot live happily without Bishops, as in England; nor Englishmen without a King. Popular elections indanger people with war and a multitude of other inconveniences. The people here, in short time, if the course here hold long, (which God forbid!) are like to be most unchristian, and the rest erroneous and ignorant enough: I have not received the Sacrament these two yeares, nor am yet like to doe, for I cannot agree to such proceedings. I am not of them, in church or common weal: Some bid me be gone, of which I am in some sort glad: others labor with me to stay, fearing my returne will do theire cause wrong; and loth am I to heare of a stay, but am plucking up stakes with as much speed as I may, if so be I may be so happy as to arrive in Ireland, there at leaste to follow my old profession, and where I have hope of some friendship, since I was last there with my Lord Deputy Wentworth now lord lieutenant-general. When they press me to stay, I hold them to such points as these: 1, Let them be pleased to show me by the Scriptures that a people may make [themselves?] a church without the presence and approbation of an Apostle or Evangelist sent unto them from a church: 2dly, That a people have power to choose and ordain their own officers: 3dly, That any ministers have power of imposition of hands, without apostolicall or evangelicall Bishops; and if they can, then I will stay. But I know not whether they will stay me volens nolens or what [ways?] they may use to stay me: but this, God willing, is the mind I shall, I hope, live and die in. I tell them the Scots have done they know not what, in putting out of Bishops: I say further to them that others may if they will strain at gnats, the cap, tippet, surplice, cross, kneeling at the Sacrament, &c., whereof none can be singly evil: but I for my part will pray that I may never swallow such camels as departe from Christ and his Apostles and Evangelists, but dissent [from] receiving imposition of hands from one another, downe from the days of the Apostles hitherto: though peradventure great corruptions and many sins have intervened and [undecipherable] many, which God pardon unto us! Further, I say to my friends that Apostles, Prophets and Evangelists ought and doe continue, as well as pastors or teachers, to the end of the world: How else can the Gospel be propagated to the Indian or Pagan nations? for Pastors and Teachers, these here make to be overseers of the flock, only. How can churches be administered without them, in peace and uniformitie? For if all churches are so free, and still one [over?] another (as they here holde), are they not in danger to become soe many fractions, if not factions, sects, divisions, confusions, what not [else?]? Also, if apostolical and evangelical Bishops, or supervisors are necessarie for the propagation of the Gospel and gathering together churches of God &c., how can they be, without great impiety, thrust out from administering to them, being gathered and approved? May they not visit such churches as they gather or approve? Must they not?

[1] The blowing up of the ship "Mary Rose" in the harbor created much excitement in the Colony. The reader will remember Lechford's marginal note, p. 164, and he will meet further reference later, pp. 165, 167, 187. If interested in the matter, he will not fail to consult Winth., ii. 11, 72, 74, and 4 Mass. Hist. Coll., vi. 141, where is a letter from Endicott to Winthrop on the matter.

To all these they give me no sufficient answers; and some silence my letters;[1] some cry out of nothing but Antichrist and the Man of Sin: I desire such to consider Mr. Zanchy's opinion, out of the Fathers, of Antichrist, and the doubtful expressions of our interpreters on the Revelation and the second Epistle to the Thessalonians and 2d chapter: whether the seat upon seven hills be a double type: whether it may not be Constantinople as well as Rome, &c. When they urge the example of Geneva, some churches in Germany, both the Higher and Lower, Scotland, &c., I then propound to them to consider what experience any of these churches had in mission to convert and plant churches among pagans and heathens. But things are amiss, and grievances burden us in temporalls and spiritualls. I [ask] what peace can we have, or deserve to have, if we goe on in such a way of disobedience to Apostolical rules? They urge the Common Prayer Book, and sermons are their burden. I say the best and learnedest are and have been beholden to forms, and when the poor Indians are to be taught, will they not teach them by forms? for extempore long prayers in publique and long [continued?] I conceive, without forms in set words and the reading of the Scriptures as well as preaching, the generation following will be more ignorant, if not erronious. In England, 12 or 13 Chapters and Psalmes[2] are read every Sunday, in all Churches, beside what is upon Wednesdays and

[1] After "letters" these words were written and erased: "And will not dispute with mee. I think either out of [contempt] of me or else despaire of their cause." [T.]

[2] In a marginal note to the Plaine Dealing (p. 20; 3 M. H. S. iii. 79) Lechford is made to say, "Whereas in England every Sunday are read in publique Chapters and Psalmes in every Church, besides the eleven or twelve Commandments," etc. This, doubtless, should be read, "eleven or twelve Chapters and Psalmes besides the Commandments," etc. [T.]

Fridays and other holydays; but here, Scripture twice a Sunday, in any Church, and upon any other day none at all, in whatsoever assembly or upon whatsoever occasion; but preaching and long [conceived?] prayers. Men may be unmercifull in their long prayers, to those that heare them. Doctrinal discourses [delivered] in prayer are not so fitting or proper unto prayer: And for ceremonies, bowing at the name of Jesus, and the like, there is no danger in them; but alreadie to drive such things out tends more to Atheisme, Arianisme, &c., than they are aware of. I forget not to tell some, that they have taken upon them opus infinitum et impossibile, in their publique discipline toward offenders. By what rule, I asked them, are the faults of men to bee so publiquely handled before all the world as to undo them? Is not a consistorie better and more agreeable to the Word of God? Is not some due pastorall [collation?] between the people and their own watchman (with reference to the Apostolicall or Evangelicall [bishop?] in weighty matters,) a great deale better and more consonant to Scripture? Besides, if all men among them were admitted to the privileges of the Church and Sacraments, in their way, then, I say, if offenses must bee so handled, I see not but they must doe nothing else almost; it will be so infinite: and further, what power have any ordinarie men (I mean those not of the ministrie) at all to [decide?] either in admission or excommunication? seeing they have not power of b[ind]ing? But Apostles and Evangelists have [express]ly power of b[ind]ing; to them it was therefore committed, consequentially, of admission and excommunication. These and the like discourses we have, but few know my full mind in some things of weight whereof I do professe I was ignorant and misled in England. You may wonder how I am now reformed: Truly, Sir, I was forced for my owne satisfaction to studie these things, and the Lord giving lesser and great, hath also given a blessing, I hope, unto mee. The land certainely is of great consequence; besides the fishing trade furs and other commodityes, there are surely rich Mines (as I believe upon credible report, and thinke I can prove); which if his Majesty [never?] takes notice of, we hope his wisest counsels will bend to look at us, a poor forlorn ignorant people. O mercy, mercy, from all the powers of mercy in heaven and on earth, to such as sin of ignorance![1] Long live England, and England's friends: let them prosper that love her. If a man travel from East to West, England is a good land: Ireland also. [Great, almost incredible are the difficulties of new plantations].[2] Here are it 's true some wise men: they want estates and maintenance, and in this way they are never like to get them, I fear. The Patent they thinke bears them out to uphold their electorie[3] proceedings, though I heare it be declared voide and sent for.[4] [It were good, I thinke, if his Majesty were so.][5]— The God of Heaven guard his Majesty and his councils, and continue to England and the united Kingdomes of our Sovereigne, and all his dominions, every blessing there and peace. If I come over as I hope to do, I shall discourse to you more at length. In the meane while, I commend you and yours to God; not forgetting my best respects unto your beloved M^rs Bacon and your neighbours, all whom I love and respect heartily, M^r Alexander Jett my s[chool] fellow, and your kinswoman his wife; rests yours assuredly in all love, service and thankfulnesse,

THOMAS LECHFORD.

[1] In the margin Lechford modestly wrote: "In the number of the ignorant, I hold myselfe, and M^r Burton, M^r Prynne and Doctor Bastock [Bastwick], and a multitude more." [T.]

[2] These words were erased. [T.]

[3] A favorite word with Lechford. "Some electorie ways tend to the overthrow of Kingdomes," he tells us in Plaine Dealing (3 M. H. C. iii., 121); and again, "That electorie courses will not long be safe here, either in Church or Commonwealth" (Id., p. 109). [T.]

[6] This is part of John Cogan's business with the main coast. More may be found in regard to Richard Foxwell, I presume on this same matter, p. 196, post. He was an old inhabitant of that region, having been at Piscataqua as early as 1630, and being, as I suppose, now settled at Scarborough, where he went in 1636. Ambrose Berry was of Saco, but nothing is known of him.

[1] James Swinforth, ship-carpenter, like Thomas Robinson, mariner, left no record by which any of his history may be traced. Goodman Gilham (or Gillam), who sold the "tarre," was a ship-carpenter, who had his shop in the fort field on the town cove. That Goodman Gillam, Benjamin by name, had "tarre" is sure enough; for we may see by the Town Record that on one occasion going so far as to make a fire out on his wharf to heat a "pitch-pott" and being detected at the same, he was fined ten shillings, of which he was made to pay five. But this was seventeen years after the "Speedwell" was sold to Thomas Witherly to carry William Boreman away to Connecticut.

[1] This piece of business is clearer than most of the transactions that took place at Dover or Oyster River. Richard Morris and Richard Bulgar we know were both Roxbury men who had left their homes during the Hutchinson controversies, and were now at Exeter, or perhaps Dover. They must have known each other well, though they may not have transacted business together. Valentine Hill had continual relations with Dover, from which place he was representative later. Mr. John Turner was a Salem West India merchant; he died at Barbadoes. William Beard, of Dover, was long after this killed by the Indians at Durham. Of William Downes alone is there no trace; but I suppose he went down to the West Indies,—perhaps to the church at Isle of Providence in the ship in which Captain William Pierce was killed. Such persons afford ample ground for conjecture.

[1] Thomas Dexter is not infrequently met with in the old authorities. There is some little that may be found to his discredit in the Colonial Records, — chiefly such as would naturally result from an over-jovial temperament and an unruly tongue. He was now of Lynn, and had been since 1630; but he subsequently moved to Barnstable, in the Colony of Plymouth.

This may be found in Savage, who says nothing at all about Samuel Searle. Dawson and Search are here called of Quinepiac, but were later of Boston. An assignment of Richard Pynnes Debt due from Allen Yewe to Robert Turner 24. Aug. 1640. [4*d.*]

Sir —

Here is a good land, and yeilding many good commodities, especially fish, and furs corne and other richer things, if well followed, and if that popular elections destroy us not. It is a good Land, I say, that instructs us to repentance, when we consider what a good Land we came from, what good lawes and government we have left, to make experiments of governing ourselves here by wayes, wherein (like young Physitians) of necessity we must hurt and spoile one another a great while, before we come to such a setled Commonwealth, or church government as is in England.

I thank God, now I understand by experience, that there is no such government for English men or any nation as a Monarchy; nor for Christians, as by a lawfull Ministerie, under godly Diocesan Bishops, deducing their station and calling from Christ and his Apostles, in descent or succession; a thing of greater consequence than ceremonies (would to God I had known it sooner) which while I have in my place stood for here these two years, and not agreeing to this new discipline, impossible to be executed, or long continued, what I have suffered, many here can tell; I am kept from the Sacrament, and all places of preferment in the Commonwealth, and forced to get my living by writing petty things, which scarce finds me bread; and therefore sometimes I took to planting of corne, but have not yet here an house of my owne to put my head in or any stock going: whereupon I was determined to come back into Ireland, but by the over-entreaty of my wife and some other friends, I here think to stay a while longer, hoping that the Lord will shortly give a good issue to things both in our native country, and Scotland, and here, as well as in all other his Majestics dominions. I was very glad to see My Lord Bishop of Exeters Book of Episcopacie by divine right; it gave me much satisfaction. If the people may make ministers, or any ministers make others without an apostolicall Bishop, what confusion will there be? If the whole Church, or every congregation, as our good men think, have the power of the keyes, how many Bishops then shall we have? If every Parish or congregation be so free and independent, as they terme it, what unity can we expect?

Glad also was I to see Master Balls Book of the tryall of the grounds of separation, both which are newly come over, and I hope will work much good among us here?

And whereas I was sometimes misled by those of opinion that Bishops, and Presbyters, & all Ministers are of the same authority; when I came to consider the necessary propagation of the truth, and government of the Church by experimentall footsteps here I quickly saw my error; For besides, if the congregations be not united under one Diocesan in fit compasse, they are in a confusion, not withstanding all their classicall pretendments, how can the Gospel be propagated to the Indians without an apostolical Bishop? If any Church, or people, by the Kings leave send forth Ministers to teach and instruct the poore Indians in the Christian Religion, they must have at least Apostolicall power to ordain Ministers or Elders in every congregation among them; and when they have so done, they have power of Visitation where they plant — Nor can they without just cause be thrust out from government without great impiety; and where they have planted, that is their line or Diocese. Thus I came to see that of necessity a Diocese and Bishop Diocesan, is very neere, if not altogether of Divine authority.

[165] I am also of opinion, that it were good for our Ministers to learn how to doe this work from some of our reverend Bishops in England, for I feare our Ministers know not how to goe about it — whether must not some Ministers learne their language? It is a copious language, as I am informed, and they have as many words to express one thing as we have. And when they teach Indians to pray, will they not teach them by a forme? And how can Gods worship be maintained among ignorant persons without a forme? I am firm of opinion that the best of us have been much beholding to the word read, and formes of prayer.

[1] Thomas Miller was one of the early settlers of Middletown, Conn. His wife, Isabell, died in 1666.

[2] Richard Betscombe was of Hingham 1635, freeman 1637. There is no mention found of the three brothers, who, I conclude, stayed on their side the ocean.

[3] Richard Waldern, of Dover, except for this and one other entry, is not mentioned before 1645. Tradition, however, says that he came in 1635, returned to England, and came again to New England. After 1645 he is constantly heard of in the Colonial Records in connection with affairs at Dover, for which he was many times deputy up to 1679. He then became a man of great prominence in the newly constituted New Hampshire, but was killed by Indians in 1789. Edward Payne was of Lynn in 1638, and the next year of Charlestown, but is found of Dover in 1643. He went to England in 1649.

[1] Thomas Millard, of Gloucester, was after this selectman. He moved a year or two afterwards to Newbury, and died in Boston in 1659. John Oliver, of Newbury, is called "younger brother, or perhaps nephew, of elder Thomas Oliver." At any rate he came over from England with him in 1632 and lived in Boston until 1638, when, having been disarmed in 1637, and rejected as a representative by the House for being a supporter of Wheelwright, he moved to Newbury, where he died in 1642.

In regard to this pack of goods so earnestly demanded, see p. 167, post, where is a deposition of Edward Bendall and further notice of Mr. Dannet, of whom we can hope to learn little beyond the fact that he was a "prophane scoffer."

[1] Nicholas Trerise, it may be remembered, was master of the "Planter" (see ante, p. 137). But what the voyage referred to was, is hardly matter for conjecture even.

[1] This word I take to be eos, or eis, intended by Lechford to agree with loci. There are many corrections in the Latin of this entry, but in this case the correction is far more ungrammatical than was the first draft.

[2] Daniel Paul is heard in of 1643 at New Haven, and later at Kittery.

[3] John Bent had just come over to New England to stay permanently. He had come in 1638 with a wife and five children (all under twelve years of age), but returned to England to bring more.

[4] Henry Symonds had a house and lot just south of Mr. Bellingham's marsh (wherein were the sawpits let to Thomas Joy). He also was of the Company to whom was granted the marsh towards Charlestown to improve (Boston Town Records, i. 74). This was in 1643, however. At the time of the above agreement, and later, he was of Lynn. (See p. 202, post).

[1] William, Thomas, and Robert Talmage are all mentioned in Savage, who does not say that they were brothers, though he suspects the relationship of Thomas and William. William was of Boston 1630, Thomas of Boston 1634, but now of Lynn, and Robert was later of New Haven. Of their brother-in-law, Walker, I find nothing very satisfactory. There is another reference to these four, p. 175, post. William Talmage, the only one of the three brothers who lived in Boston, had a house on Boylston Street, the north side, near Washington Street.

[2] William Longley, of Lynn, has been a puzzling man to the antiquarians, and this entry does not help in clearing matters. He is called son of Richard by Savage, who feels rather confused about him. It may be that there were two men of the same name. William Langley, of Lynn, adds to the confusion.

[1] The following may interest the reader who does not care to consult Winthrop (vol. ii. pp. 11, 72) and Johnson (vol. iii. p. ix, B): "Within two hours after this (being about dinner-time) the powder took fire (no man knows how), and blew all up; viz., the captain and nine or ten of his men, and some four or five strangers. There was a special providence that there were no more; for many principal men were going aboard at that time, and some were in a boat near the ship, and others were diverted by a sudden shower of rain, and others by other occasions. There was one man saved, being carried up in the scuttle, and so let fall in the same into the water" (Winth., ii. 11).

[2] Robert Gamlyn, of Roxbury, may be found in Savage. There were two of the name, who came with Elder Thomas Weld in 1632. The elder one lived at Concord the greater part of his life, but the other, called "junior" (by which it may be supposed he was son of the former), remained at Roxbury. He had brought his wife Mary and her son, here mentioned, from England with him. John Mayo is noted in Savage as having been brought as a young child by his stepfather to New England. To Mary Mayo, the aunt of John here mentioned, I find no reference.

Abraham Harding[3] of Boston in New England sonne of John Harding late of Boram in the County of Essex husband-

[1] I cannot say with what purpose Lechford inserts this mention of the good ship "Charles," of Bristol. There is mention of the vessel in Winthrop (vol. ii. pp. 22, 44), who says that although the master was a plain, quiet man, the crew were very wicked. Indeed it is on account of this wicked crew that the "Charles" finds its way into history. For these forty-four men were such contemners of the Lord's Day that various judgments befell them, which may be observed by the curious reader in the Journal as above indicated. Winthrop in one place says the ship was of four hundred tons burden, and that it came from Dartmouth. I hesitate to assert that this vessel was the same which came in the fleet with the "Arbella," and was set on by Dunkirkers on its return.

[2] Savage says that John and Daniel Prior came from London in the "Hopewell" at the respective ages of fifteen and thirteen. This was late in 1635. They were both of Scituate, and later moved to Duxbury.

[3] Abraham Harding, Savage calls an early settler at Dedham, and says "perhaps lived first at Braintree." Braintree was at this time part of Boston; but it is probable that if Harding lived at Dedham at all, it was before the date of this entry in the Note-book, for the early settlers of Dedham had begun their town and dug their canal from the Charles to the Neponset before this time. He may have moved to Dedham afterwards. "Boram in the county of Essex" may be found by looking for Boreham.

[1] This entry may throw light on a very unimportant point which I find unsettled in Savage,—as to one of the name of Floyd who was in 1650 treasurer of the Society for Propagating the Gospel. Deane says that John Floyd of Scituate and Boston was the man, and Hutchinson supposes Richard Floyd to be the treasurer of that corporation. Savage himself says that "on turning to Scobell's Acts of that Parliament, we find the family name of the member of that corporation was Lloyd, and not Floyd;" and adds, "we may be sure the treasurer must have been a London merchant." It may be that the here-mentioned John Floyd, citizen and haberdasher of London was the person in question, and that his name was Floyd, Savage and Scobell to the contrary notwithstanding.

[2] William Colbron and John Button were members of the Boston church, as here stated, and, like most of their brothers in that church, had decided leanings towards the heretical doctrines of Mrs. Hutchinson. John Button was disarmed; but being held in some honor by his townsmen, was in the course of a year or two elected constable. He was a miller by trade, and had been even while in Old England, where he was born in 1594. He set up his mill on Copps' Hill, which, it may be, was called Mill Field after it. He lived near by, and was always a member of the committees appointed to oversee the fences or highways in the Mill Field. He gave up the mill to John Mylam, as I think, in 1643. (See Boston Town Records, p. 76, and Suff. Deeds, li. f. 307.) He continued to live in the Mill Field, however, and was at times surveyor of highways. He died in 1681.

Thomas Floyd to be such a man as might have claimed a place in Savage's Dictionary. I find no such name as Thomas, however, at Floyd, or Loyd either.

[1] No other mention of Arthur Howland is found earlier than 1643, and scant notice enough after that date. In 1669 it is known that he was aged and poor; but how aged or how poor I find stated nowhere.

[2] Not much can be said of Samuel Grymes, or Graemes, as it is sometimes spelled. He may have been the old man who was dead, according to a popular song, and who was in the habit while in life of wearing a long gray coat, which he buttoned down before, instead of buttoning it up, as is customary. As for Hurst, I find a Goodman Hurst, who, like the man in question here, seems, says Savage, not to have enjoyed a Christian name. William Hawkins, of Providence, freeman 1655, may have been the "Rode Island" man spoken of.

[1] James Forret of Long Island was the agent of the Earl of Stirling for his patent of Long Island. He was in Boston about this time the next year, but probably only temporarily. (See ante, p. 56).

[2] Ralfe Sprague came to New England in 1629 (according to Savage, whom I see no reason to doubt, though there is in this case some question). He brought with him his wife and his sons John and Richard. He was of that part of the Boston church which were dismissed to form the church at Charlestown. [1] William Rix, of Boston, was a weaver. He was not in any way prominent, however, for I find no mention of him in the Town Records nor in the Colonial Records. His name is not in the Book of Possessions in any connection.

[1] There is no such name as Sanley to be found in Savage. I fear conjecture as to another spelling would be useless.

[2] I think that it must be as an answer to this petition that the General Court, 2 June, 1641, voted that "it is conceived that Tymo: Hawkins hath nothing due to him in justice, so nothing is to be allowed him; but if he will put in security to pay 45l, hee is granted the house to take away, & dispose of it, provided he give his answer within a month."

The fortifications at Castle Island were at this time in the hands of private undertakers, who were aided by subsidies from the General Court. It was not kept up to the satisfaction of the Court, however, and the island and the house thereon were given to Captain Gibbons until such time as the public good might need them back again. The public good needed them in 1643, when the arrival of La Tour with a large ship showed the inhabitants of the town how much harm might be done by the arrival of an enemy. The island was then re-fortified, great exertions being made by the towns around the harbor, as may be seen in the Boston Town Records.

[1] From the mention here of Henry Smith and Edward Gillman together, I should like to believe them to be the men bearing those names who came over together in 1638 and settled at Hingham. It is true that the fact that two men crossed the ocean in the same ship does not necessarily imply that they are always to be mentioned together, and also that it is a little unlikely that Timothy Hawkins should have bought lumber of a couple of Hingham men for Castle Island, which lies much nearer Dorchester Neck than anywhere else. If this Henry Smith was the Hingham man, he was representative in the General Court the next year.

[2] Of Thomas Taylor, of Watertown, little is known. He had a child born a year or two after this, whom he named Seabred. As for the "Sparrow," the name, met with once or twice in the indorsement of some of Governor Winthrop's letters, "Resp. per the Sparrow, J. Bradshaw," is indorsed on a letter dated March 15, 1639; and the same occurs on letters dated May 15, 1640, and March 26, 1640. In 1622 Mr. Thomas Weston sent "3 small ships for his perticuler plantation, the greatest whereof being 100 tune." Of these the "Sparrow" was one, not the largest. But I cannot say that the ship here mentioned was the one which conveyed the unlucky emigrants sent by Thomas Weston.

[1] Bozoum Allen was of Hingham. He came over in 1638, — in the same ship, by the way, with Henry Smith and Edward Gillman. He was representative from Hingham in 1641 and various other years. His name is remembered by the reader of Winthrop as being that of one of the principals in that very curious contest in regard to religious, civil, and military liberty which was waged in the General Court in regard to the Hingham train-band in the year 1645.

[2] Thomas Grubb, leather-dresser, of Boston, was constable of the town in 1646. His house was on the west side of what is now Washington Street, somewhat south of the Old South Church. His name occurs frequently enough in the Town Record as surveying highways, inspecting fences, and levying rates. As might have been expected, he was neither high enough in station nor low enough to make an appearance in the Records of the Colony, where few besides magistrates and criminals are to be found.

[3] It is pleasant to find this statement confirmed in Savage. Wheeler removed to Fairfield with some other Concord men in 1644, and died there in very good circumstances in 1670. Savage, following Farmer, says that he had a son Isaac, born 1638. This may or may not be true.

[1] Savage is confused between two Benjamins and two Nathaniels. I suppose the two here mentioned to have been brothers, and each of them to have had a son named after himself. The first generation lived in Hingham, and the second lived in Hull.

[2] John Treworthy will be remembered by the reader as having been mentioned before in the Note-book. Mr. Shapley, of Dartmouth, was perhaps the father of Alexander Shapley, who was in New England at about this time as agent for Ferdinando Gorges. Catherine, the daughter of Alexander Shapley, married James Treworthy, of Kittery, who is thought to have been the brother of John. As has been already said, there are doubts as to the existence of John Treworthy, but it seems from this as though they were ill-founded. Mr. Shapley was the grandfather of the wife of James Treworthy, and the grand-uncle-in-law of John, though not here so called. As for the ship "Desire" of Totnes, it can hardly be the ship of that name which was built at Marblehead in 1636 and made several successful voyages to England and back again.

And the said W^{m} Hollway is charged wth twenty eight shillings for carryage of the said goods from Pascattaway to Boston w^{ch} he ought not to pay And lastly the said Will^{m} Hollway complaineth that there are lost of the said goods of the value of 8^{l} 12. 7. divers of them to the value of six pounds twelve shillings or therabouts All the said wrongs & injuries done by the default of the said John Treworthy and his said Grandfather and Richard Day. [1] Thomas Robinson, of Scituate, was not the mariner of the same name of whom mention has been made before. He married the daughter of John Cogan (Mary) in 1642, and subsequently (at her death), Elizabeth Sherman, both of whom were at the time widows. It is to be hoped that his troubles with the widow Thompson were of a purely financial nature. Whether Thompson was her maiden name, or the name of her husband, is hardly more than matter for remote conjecture.

[2] This same document, with certain unimportant differences, may be found in the Mass. Col. Rec., i. 298. The last paragraph, in regard to the arrest of Goodman Swift and the suit about Smithman and Stacey, is not in the Record. In its place is this paragraph, immediately following that ending "as shall be agreeable to equity:" —

"If the Court be pleased to record this order, I consent to it.

Andrew Coleman does not appear in Savage, and of Swift Savage seems to have known little that he did not gain from the above paper, except that he was of Watertown and came before 1634. Indeed it is doubtful if the William Swift who, as Savage says, came from Bocking was the same man as the above-mentioned, for Savage goes on, "Sold his estate 1637, and removed, probably to Sandwich; there died January, 1644." It was about midsummer, 1637, that Swift was arrested and imprisoned in Whitechapel. Of his son Edward "that was prentice" there is no mention in New England authorities.

[1] This entry is interesting as bringing together the names of several prominent New England merchants. Samuel Wakeman was one of the earliest settlers at Hartford, having before lived in Roxbury and Cambridge. About a year after this time he was killed (together with Captain William Pierce) in the course of a voyage to the West Indies, having been "sent with goods to buy cotton" (Winthrop, ii. 33). Henry Wolcott was also of Connecticut. He was a prominent man in Windsor, and a large merchant. Valentine Hill and John Cogan were two of the most prominent merchants of Boston, and Pierce was a noted shipmaster. Of the Bristol merchants I am sorry to say I have no knowledge. The ship "Charles" was owned by Mr. Thomas Elbridge, alderman of Bristol, as we may see in the accounts which appear later.

[2] This would seem as though Mrs. Ann Cogan had been a Jordan before marriage. The name Dominicus Jordan, which appears in Scarborough towards the end of the seventeenth century, seems as if it might be in some way connected with the late Ignatius Jordan.

Right Worthy Sir. I sent you at my first landing here an unwise letter of which I [deserved ?] to receive no answer, —

[1] There were two physicians of the name of John Clarke in New England at this time. The one was John Clarke of Newport, who had been driven from Boston with Mrs. Hutchinson. The other, here mentioned, was of Newbury at this time, but later moved to Boston, where he died in 1664. His wife, Martha, was the sister of Sir Richard Saltonstall, and survived him for sixteen years more or less, during which time it may be inferred she subsisted on the proceeds of certain patent stoves invented by her husband. (See Mass. Col. Rec., iv. 104, 260.) The patent was granted to her husband only for life, but at his death there were many stoyes left which came to her by his will.

I cannot forget my respect towards you and your worthy and beloved family, my good lady and all your dear and hopeful children, as in my [poor ?] supplications I remember dayly. In a word or two, we heare of great disturbances in our deare native countrey; I am heartily sorry that I had [ever hand ?] in some of the [causes ?]. I beseech you take my briefe opinion; we here are quite out of the way of right government both in Church and Commonwealth, as I verily think, and as far as I can judge upon better consideration, and some pains taken in searching after the bottome of some things. Poure Electoric wayes tried to the overthrow of Kingdomes:

No such way for government of Englishmen, as a Monarchie; of Christians as by Diocesan Bishops or Evangelists in their line. Better yeeld to many pressures in a Monarchie: then for subjects to destroy and spoile one another, [as I fear we must do here-long before we come to any settledness either in Church or Commonwealth.] If I were worthy to advise a word, I should desire you to have a care, and so all your friends, you prejudice not your estate, or posterity, by too much opposing the Regall power; For I verily beleeve the King's Majesty hath in general a good cause touching Episcopacie [against the Sectaries]. My reasons I could better deliver in presence, if haply God give opportunity to see you, or if you require it hereafter, I will be ready to present my thoughts unto you; all this, as I shall answer before the Lord, without any by-respects. If you were here I presume you would see more than I can, but I think you would be much of my mind. I hear that you [required ?] that 20^{l} I owed you of Mr. Hill. God's will be done. I am not able to pay it yet, but shall be mindfull, God willing to discharge it as soon as I can. I am thankfull and desire to be yet more thankfull to you for the loan of it. If you hear anything of me specially from Mr. Hooke or his wife, pray keep an ear for me, for we have had some [several words erased]. I wish you knew how I am used: For this time thus I take my leave heartily recommending your worship and all yours to the guidance and [undecipherable] of his heavenly majesty, resting yours in all service to be commanded.

Will^{m} Withington[3] of Portsmouth planter assignes his servant Richard Haynes unto John Budd of Quinapeage

[1] The Note-book mentions John Pollard briefly after this in several places, but in each place in some business connection. He may be barely mentioned by Savage, or it may be another of the same name who is there noted. He would seem to have been a small business man who attended so carefully to his own concerns as to escape the big books of the Town Clerk or the Secretary of the Colony. John Button had three houses on the road leading west from Bendall's Dock, now called Elm Street (according to Lamb's map ; G, 24, Book of Possessions).

[2] This Mr. Sherman I imagine, upon some slight evidence, to be the husband of the woman who gained notoriety by her persistent opposition to Captain Keayne in the matter of the stray sow, — of which some mention is made in the latter part of the Note-book (post, p. 234).

[3] William Withington was (ante, p. 119) of Newport. At this time the two towns of Portsmouth and Newport were embraced in one body politic. Portsmouth had been settled first by William Hutchinson, Aspinwall Coddington, John Clarke, and others ; but certain dissensions occurring, Coddington and others were cast out of the body, and Hutchinson was chosen judge in the place of Coddington. The latter with his adherents removed to the spot which is now the city of Newport, and formed a separate body. In a little more than a year, however, the inhabitants of Portsmouth were, at their own request, united to the people of Newport, and Coddington was chosen Governor, with Hutchinson as one of the assistants.

[1] John Budd was long after this (1664 and later) a prominent man in New Haven. He held the office of lieutenant, and also of representative.

[2] Mr. Stephen Goodyear was a London merchant who lived in New Haven from 1638 to 1656. He was assistant during his earlier residence, and Deputy Governor during his later stay. His wife went home some time before him, and was wrecked on the way to London in a vessel of Mr. George Lamberton's, which was lost with all on board. Mr. Goodyear consoled himself by marriage with Mrs. Lamberton, with whom he went back to London. One of his daughters became the wife of Samuel Wakeman, of whom mention was made just above.

[3] Although Savage puts 1638 as the date of Stephen Goodyear's magistracy at New Haven, I must think that this is the same man. Andrew, the son of Stephen, was not born until 1640. It may be that John Goodyear, the brother (?) of Stephen is referred to in both cases. Of this latter little is known save his residence at New Haven.

[4] Palfrey says that the name of Rhode Island was given to the island of Rhode Island in 1644. This mention is nearly three years before that time.

[5] I do not find any mention at all of the "Prospera" of Dartmouth. Even in the Winthrop Papers, where the name of the ship bringing the letter is often indorsed on the back of it, there is no trace of the "Prospera." It is probable enough that the "Prospera" seldom came to Boston, her chief business naturally being at Piscataqua, where the three Treworthys were in business. Owen Williams is on the freeman's list at Newport in 1655. He afterwards moved to Norwich, Conn., and there died in 1682.

Harman Garrett[3] of Charlestowne in New England Gunsmith covenants w^th^ John Edwards of the same blacksmith

[1] John Lowe was of Boston, and, as is here said, a wheelwright by his trade. His shop was along by the water-side north of the Town Dock, and near the sawpits in Richard Bellingham's marsh, of which mention has been made. Goodman Lowe he is called in the Town Records, where he is seldom mentioned, though references to his house occur more than once.

[2] There is more to be found in Lechford's Note-book about Philip Gibb than in all other New England authorities put together, where he is conspicuous only by his almost absolute absence. As we shall find later, he was the agent of James Gammon and Thomas Harwood, merchants of Barnstaple, in the County of Devon, neither of whom, I am very sure, ever came to New England, although the name Thomas Harwood occurs in Savage. There are in the Note-book notices of business transactions between Gibb (sometimes acting for Harwood and Gammon, and sometimes with no reference to them), and Richard Parker and John Cogan, and I have no doubt that he had to do with other Boston merchants. That his name does not occur in Savage is not remarkable, for he probably never went to church, married, had children, died, committed a crime, or held an office in New England, — the principal methods by which many of his time made themselves known to posterity and to Mr. Savage. The only mention of him I can recall is in the Colonial Record (vol. i. p. 339), where he is called "Mr. Philip Gibs," or "Mr. Gibs," which seems as if he were a person of some consideration.

[3] Harman Garrett (or Herman, as it is generally spelled) was a blacksmith as well as gunsmith at Charlestown, where he lived from 1638 to 1652, when he moved to Boston. It is not impossible that John Edwards may have to instruct him in the art of a gunsmith according to the best of his skill within the space of one yeare next ensuing & that the said John shall have the one halfe of the profitts of his owne worke in that art during the said terme & for this he is to pay the said Harman five pounds & ten shillings within 3 moneths next ensuing the date hereof dated 17. 7. 1640. [1] Moses Cox, of Hampton, and Margaret, the wife of John Stebbins, of Watertown, are both in Savage; but I find no mention of the tried suet.

[2] Richard Jackson, of Cambridge, was a man of note in the town for many years, being representative to the General Court.

[3] Nathaniel Patten, it would seem, had but just come over; for a week after this date he purchased a house and land in Dorchester of one Eels, as may be read in the Fourth Report of the Record Commissioners. His name occurs frequently afterwards in various ways. He was selectman in 1657 and 1658, and died in 1661, leaving no children, as Savage supposes. Henry Andrewes was one of the first settlers of Taunton, and representative 1639–1644. William Holloway, of Taunton, was there for a few years only, and in 1652 moved to Boston.

[1] William Downes can hardly be identified by the fact that he once bought a cow from Mr. Nicholas Streete. The last-named was at this time the minister at Taunton, and we may hope that he was paid for the cow, which might easily have been his whole quarter's salary. He was afterwards minister in New Haven in place of Hooke, who had been his colleague in Taunton.

[2] Why this bill of exchange, with the protest thereof, was not inserted above, p. 147, where it belongs, is not clear. It is perfectly possible that Lechford did not then have it in his possession. Eaton was about this time in Virginia, where our friend Governor Winthrop says he was given up "to extreme pride and sensuality, being usually drunken, as the custom is there."

[1] "John Greenland is granted his petition, which is to plant upon a five-acre lot in Charles Town bounds on Misticke side" (Mass. Col. Rec., i. 309, under date Oct. 7, 1640).

In Wyman's Charlestown I find no account of the way in which John Greenland acquired this lot; but there is mention of his exchanging a lot (this one, as I suppose) of five acres "at Moltons Island" with Thomas Moulton against ten acres of land in Malden.

Joseph Hollway of Sandwich in New England millwright aged about thirty five yeares sworne saith upon his oath that about nyne moneths since he had certaine commodities of the wife of Thomas Richards of Weymouth that is to say kersey at 6^{s} 6^{d} p yard bayes at 4^{s} 2^{d} p yard and bynding lace at 7^{d} a yard when he came to reckon for it she did affirme that he had of her three quarters of a yard of kersey more than he had & sayd it was so much upon the booke & would have ben payd for so much.

That in or about March last past he heard the wife of Thomas Richards of Weymouth speaking of Henry Waltham & Will^{m} Waltham say these words viz^{t} The Walthams are cozeners & cheaters.[1] [6*d.*]

[1] It is unfortunate that the private character of Mr. Henry Waltham and of Mrs. Richards is not a more important matter of history, for the Note-book throws considerable light upon it. The careful reader of the two other passages of the Note-book referring to them (pp. 195, 207, post) who may compare them with the Colonial Record, i. 267, cannot fail to be of the mind that although Mrs. Richards was undoubtedly prejudiced in her statements, the opinion here expressed, in regard to Henry Waltham at least, was in some measure justifiable. The casual reader, who may not care to consult the Record, will find these extracts helpful in forming an opinion: —

4 June, 1639. "M^{r} Waltham and M^{r} Richards were fined 5^{s} for want of scales and weights in their mill and to provide them by the next Court. M^{r} Waltham was fined 3^{li} for taking too much tole, in some above double what was dew, whereof 20^{s} to be given the witnes" (Mass. Col. Rec., i. 267).

30 January, 1639. "William Waltham, for being drunke aboard the ship called the Bristowe Marchant, w^{ch} he confessed, was fined twenty shillings, it being the first time he was known to be drunke, & so was seriously admonished, & dismissed" (Ibid., i. 285).

Thomas Richards had come to New England in 1630, and settled at Dorchester, but by this time was removed to Weymouth. William Waltham died very shortly after this.

[1] Although there is a difference in point of time of about a year between the two, I connect this account with almost the only other mention of Thomas Marshfield in New England chronology,—part of a letter written from Tho. Marshfield to Samuel Wakeman, which was copied into the first volume of Suffolk Deeds (f. 12) by John Winthrop (6. 3. 1641):—

"For M[r] Patten, I conceive he hath received some wronge; I did receive one hundred & fiftye pounds allmost of him—not that that is all Due to him."

Marshfield died the next year,—or at least disappeared,—and his family moved to Springfield. (See Conn. Rec., Oct. 12, 1642.)

[1] It may have been that it was at the end of this voyage, referred to above, that Samuel Maverick gave bond for 120^{l} for the Company of the Charles "to answer such actions as are or shall be brought."

[2] John Bibble was a Boston man in 1637, and subsequently moved to Malden. He died in 1658; and at this his wife came to New England, and desirous perhaps of ridding herself of her sibilant name, married Miles Nutt, and subsequently John Doolittle.

Thomas Lund[2] late of Hingham in N E makes a le^r^ of Attorney to Thomas Grubb of Boston in N E to receive all moneys due unto him. 24 Oct 1640. [6*d.*]

Will^m^ Pomfret[3] of Dover upon Pascattaway river Planter bound to George Druell[4] of London marriner to deliver & pay unto him or his assignes one thousand of redd oake merchantable clapboard for the passage of Hosanna Pomfrett his wife & Elizabeth their daughter. [1*s.*]

John Holgrave[5] of Salem in N. E. marriner bound to Edward Paine of Wap: in the County of Midd marriner for payment of 37l ult' Julii px at his house in Salem. [1*s.*]

[1] The said Robert did pass into England, I imagine, for he certainly has left no trace behind him except this one mention. Theodore Atkinson was a feltmaker of Boston. He came to this country in 1634 in the employment of John Newgate the hatter, who, one may imagine, made the tall hats worn by all the Puritan Governors; for he was a man of consequence, and I doubt not was one of the first in his trade.

[2] Thomas Lund, a merchant, brought from London, 1646, power from certain citizens of London to collect debts. This is all Savage says on the matter. Thomas Grubb was a leather-dresser living on Washington Street, opposite Milk. (See ante, p. 172.)

[3] William Pomfret was early town clerk of Dover, and lieutenant. He lived until 1680.

[4] George Druell, of London, called at one time "marriner," and at another "grocer," was agent for one Edward Payne, mariner, of Wapping, as well, doubtless, as for others.

[5] It is curious that this agreement of John Holgrave should have been made with Edward Payne rather than Druell, his agent in New England. It may be, however, that Druell was only Payne's agent for some particular transaction. John Holgrave himself is merely noted by Savage as being representative at the first Assembly.

[1] Of George Story, of Boston, merchant, little is known beyond what may be derived from the history of Captain Keayne's sow, so frequently alluded to by early historians of this country.

[2] This entry unfortunately does not throw any light on a subject of some interest which it calls to mind,— the culture of silk in New England. The silk-throwster was a man who ran a factory for the throwsting or twisting of silk after it had been first wound and before it could be woven. At this time London was full of French Huguenots, busily engaged in introducing the silk manufacture there, who all turned their eyes to the New World as a means of obtaining silk that need not come through France and Italy. The experiments in silk culture were not successful even in the Southern and Middle States, where they were most tried, and in New England very little was ever done at all. See a very interesting article on "Colonial Husbandry" by Edward Eggleston in the Century Magazine for January, 1884.

[3*s.*]

[1] Richard Callicot was of Dorchester, as was Thomas Allen. (See. p. 195, post.) The name of the former occurs frequently in the Dorchester Town Records (usually spelled Collicot). It is difficult to identify Thomas Allen in Savage, on account of the large number bearing that name. He appears only once or twice in the Dorchester Records.

[2] This certificate (if it could be found) ought to convince one of the existence of Wm. Vicars, Savage notwithstanding.

Abraham Shawe[1] sometime of Hallifax in the County of Yorke Clothier & late of Dedham in N E planter made his last will & testament about November 1638. & thereby made Joseph Shawe his eldest sonne & Nicholas Biram his sonne in lawe his executors & dyed having 100l & divers other dutyes in the hands of severall persons they give a letter of attorney to Mr [blank] Best of Hallifax aforesaid Clothier to receive the same & all profitts of Colemines whatsoever & the same Colemines to sell &c. John Page[4] of Waterton in N E pl. for 32l 8s mortgageth unto George Druell Citizen & grocer of London Attorney & assignee of Edward Payne of Wapping in the C of Mid marriner six heads of Cattel specifyed in a schedule hereunto

[1] We can add nothing to Savage's note on Abraham Shaw from this letter of attorney.

[2] Savage says that this estate, called by him "Blackbush right," was sold by Redknap in 1649 to one Edward Tomlyns, which would seem as though it were not surrendered at this time. A friend suggests "Blackbush Eyot" as the name of the estate. The spelling in the text above, "eight," might easily stand for "Eyot."

[3] What these "costs and charges" could have been for, I can hardly imagine. Mr. Thomas Willis at this time was one of those appointed to "joyne with the magistrates at Salem to assist them in keeping their Courts." Bradshaw has left no trace of himself. This notice seems as though he were going to England.

[4] John Page came to New England with Winthrop, and lived in Watertown for a long time, having a son of his name who lived there after him.

[1] Joseph Bemis was not so old an inhabitant, having been at Watertown for only a year or so. He was a prominent man in town affairs, often selectman and so forth.

[2] Job Judkin, it may be remembered, was one of those who undertook to teach some manner of trade to William Boreman (p. 142, ante).

[3] Robert Harding went to Newport with others of the Hutchinson party after their defeat in Boston. He was a man of consideration in his new home, as he had been in his old.

[1] The Note-book for some pages is now filled with depositions, petitions, and notes in regard to a suit brought by Mrs. Anne Stratton, of Salem, against

County of Suffolk gent deceased sworne saith that Joseph Stratton sometime of Harwich in the County of Essex marriner and now of James Citty in Virginia brother of her said husband did in or about the yeare of our Lord one thousand six hundred and twenty eight stand indebted unto Will^{m} Stratton this deponent her sonne deceased in the summe of 80^{l} principall debt for payment whereof the said Joseph entered into one bond or obligation of a greater summe w^{ch} said debt should have bin payd unto this deponent her said sonne in his life time about 12 yeares since. And this deponent saith that the said Joseph Stratton did likewise in or about the yeare of our Lord one thousand six hundred and twenty three stand indebted unto her said husband by bill or bond in the summe of sixty pounds at the least principall debt w^{ch} should have bin payd unto her said husband in his lifetime about 17 yeares since and this deponent saith that she doth not knowe that the said Joseph hath payd or satisfied the said principall debts or any parte thereof one or other unto her said Sonne or husband their [or] either of their executors administrators or ass^{s}. And this deponent saith that the said Joseph did by word of mouth in this deponents hearing and by letters of this w^{ch} this deponent hath seen & read acknowledge the said debt of 80^{l} unto the said Will^{m} Stratton and promised satisfaction thereof and did also acknowledge the said debt of sixty pounds demanded on the behalfe of her said husband and likewise promised payment thereof twelve yeares since or thereabouts. And this deponent saith that she had both the said specialtyes in keeping divers yeares but after the death of the said Will^{m} this deponent to her best remembrance delivered them unto her sonne John Stratton of Salem aforesaid to whome of right the said debts did & doth belong as she conceiveth He being Executor of the last will & Testament of her said late husband and brother unto the said Will^{m} who was also indebted unto the said John and her brother-in-law William Stratton, of James City (so called), Virginia. We learn little from the case that is now of interest. Mrs. Anne Stratton was the mother of John Stratton, of Scarborough (see ante, p. 121), and of Elizabeth, who became the wife of John Thorndike, — a fact unknown to Savage. Of Joseph Stratton, of Virginia, I know nothing.

in particular by the writing now shewed unto this deponent whereto she did write her name as a witnesse and was present when the same was subscribed sealed & delivered by the said Will[m] And she hath credibly heard and verely believeth that the said John lost the said two first mentioned specialtyes by Casting away of a Boate w[th] many other goods & writings belonging to the said John And further [185] this deponent saith the said Will[m] being to goe for Virginia in the yeare 1628 first above mentioned had of her this deponent divers goods amounting to the value of forty pounds at the least of lawfull money of England and that he had of the said John other goods to the value of fifty pounds at the least of like lawfull money of England all w[ch] goods or very neare all of them the said Joseph carryed away w[th] him to Virginia leaving the said Will[m] behind him in England. And lastly this deponent saith that the said Joseph about the time of his said departure forth of England had of the said John her sonne one Watch and a Clocke for w[ch] the said Joseph was to pay unto the said John the summe of five pounds of like lawfull money. [2*s.* 6]

Ralph Fogge[1] of Salem in New England gent aged about forty yeares sworne saith that he was present to his best remembrance and saw when the two specialtyes mentioned in the aforewritten deposition of M[ris] Anne Stratton were by her delivered unto her said sonne John Stratton at Dedham in the County of Essex. [6*d.*]

Elizabeth Thorndike aged about 26 yeares wife of John Thorndike of Salem in New England gent sworne saith that she was present and saw when her mother M[ris] Anne Stratton delivered unto her brother John Stratton the two bonds or specialtyes w[ch] she hath heard & verely believeth were made by M[r] Joseph Stratton the one of them for eighty pounds to her brother Will[m] Stratton deceased and the other of them

John Stratton of Salem in New England gent aged about 34 yeares sworne saith that his mother M^ris^ Anne Stratton in or about the moneth of December in the yeare of our Lord 1631 delivered unto this deponent at Dedham in Essex in the presence of Ralfe Fogge and this deponents sister Elizabeth Thorndike the two specialtyes wherein his uncle M^r^ Joseph stood bound in the one of them for eighty pounds unto my brother Will^m^ Stratton deceased and in the other of them for sixty pounds unto his father M^r^ John Stratton deceased And this deponent saith that he knoweth the said specialtyes were the proper acts and deeds of the said Joseph by his hand & seale and further this deponent saith that he lost the said specialtyes w^th^ other writings & goods by the casting away of a boate at Cape Porpis in America about ten yeares since. And this deponent saith that the writing now shewed unto him is the testimony of Isaacke Allerton marriner and that it is subscribed w^th^ his proper hand writing & name &c. [1–6]

Sheweth that this Complᵗ hath bin an Inhabitant in Weymouth aforesaid by the space of six yeares last past or thereabouts and ought in right to have a share in the necke of land in Waymouth the said John Upham & W S & the rest of the said defendᵗˢ wᵗʰout the generall Consent of the Towne made an agreement that the new Planters with Richard Silvester & Arthur Warren should have the said necke of land allotted among them and unjustly left out this Complᵗˢ name saying that he was no planter and whereas this Complᵗ should have had three acres of land at the least upon the plaine the Defendᵗˢ have assigned him but two acres there And whereas the Plt had three acres of land going to the mill the said Defendᵗˢ have uniustly given the same to Richard Knight And the said Defendᵗˢ deteyne the Plts share of the meddow ground within the said towne wᶜʰ should be three acres at the least And the said defendᵗˢ have assigned and taken great lotts to themselves but have not assigned any great lotts to the rest of the planters there. And they have uniustly given away lands out of this Complᵗˢ and other men their rights And also have overrated this Complᵗ and other inhabits there. Lastly the said defendᵗˢ keepe the Towne booke disorderly some leaves having bin cutt forth & some blotts and other defects there are therein The Complᵗ prayeth that the defendᵗˢ may be enjoined to appeare at the next Court to answere the premises & bring the said Towne booke wᵗʰ them. [1—6]

[1] I cannot find that this petition of Richard Lang was ever acted upon. John Upham and William Smith were both commissioners for Weymouth, and also deputies, and Warren and Silvester were both well-known men; so it is probable that the matter was passed over.

The Bill of Complaint of JOHN STRATTON of Salem in New England gent

In all humble manner sheweth unto yo^{r} wor^{p} that yo^{r} suppliant is sonne and heire and Executor of the last will and Testament of John Stratton sometime of Shotley in the County of Suffolk gent deceased and that Joseph Stratton now of James City in Virginia gent yo^{r} suppliants uncle and brother of the said Testator in or about the yeare of our Lord One thousand six hundred twenty and three stood indebted by bill or bond unto the said Testator yo^{r} suppliants said ffather in the summe of sixty pounds of lawfull money of England principall debt: And that yo^{r} suppliant had a Brother one William

[1] Savage says, in a note on Winthrop, ii. 159, that S. W. Campbell is the only writer known to him "who takes notice of the administration of Sir Francis Wyatt from 1639, when Hervey was superseded, to 1641, when Berkeley was appointed."

Stratton of Ardlye in the County of Essex gent deceased who about the yeare of our Lord one thousand six hundred and twenty eight intended to passe over from England into Virginia in Company with the said Joseph Stratton and had for his portion one hundred pounds in redy money in his purse and besides yo^{r} suppliants adventured by him and delivered into his hands divers moneys goods and commodities to the value of ffifty pounds at the least And this Complainant saith that the said Joseph by his faire intreaties & perswasions in the said yeare 1628 borrowed eighty pounds of the said Will^{m} out of his said portion and entered into one bond of a greater summe how much in certaine this Comp^{t} cannot remember for the repayment of the said eighty pounds after that sometime in the same yeare or neare thereabouts and also the said Joseph by his said intreatys and perswasions gott into his hands & possession all or very neare all of the said goods & commodities w^{ch} this Complainant delivered unto the said Will^{m} and the said Joseph having gotten into his hands the said 80^{l} and 50^{l} worth of goods and upon some pretence of businesse sent the said Will^{m} from Plymouth to Ardelye afors^{d} the said Joseph bearing the said Will^{m} in hand that he would stay at Plimouth aforesaid till the said Will^{m} returned thither and so both together to passe over into Virginia but the said Will^{m} was no sooner come to Ardelye aforesaid but newes followed him that the said Joseph had sett sayle & was gone for Virginia and so he carryed away the said 80^{l} being the greatest parte of the said Will^{ms} portion and the said fifty pounds worth of goods and commodities and left the said Will^{m} in England to rely upon yo^{r} suppliant and his mother for his maintenance to their great costs & charges And yo^{r} suppliant further showeth [189] that the said Joseph never payd the said debts or any parte of the same either to yo^{r} suppliants ffather or Brother in their lives time nor since to yo^{r} suppliant and further that his mother M^{ris} Anne Stratton now of Salem aforesaid did deliver both the said specialtyes to yo^{r} Suppliant about ten yeares since at Dedham in Essex and afterwards the same yeare or thereabout yo^{r} suppliant lost them by casting away of a boate at Cape porpis in America wherein the said specialtyes & many other writings & goods of this Compl^{ts} were lost. Also this Compl^{t} sheweth that he is the only brother and heire of the said Will^{m} and that he was indebted unto yo^{r} Suppts and therefore of right the administration of the said Will^{m} his goods rights & credits belongeth to be granted unto yo^{r} suppliant as next of kin and creditor to the said Will^{m} or to whomsoever yo^{r} suppl^{t} shall depute thereunto and because yo^{r} Supl^{t} cannot at this season conveniently travell to Virginia he hath deputed M^{r} Robert Keayne M^{r} Thomas Owen and M^{r} Thomas Stegge or either of them to procure the said letters of admin unto whome yo^{r} suppliant prayeth yo^{r} wor^{ps} to grant the saide or to one of them and to take their names or one of them as Compl^{ts} in this present bill wth yo^{r} suppliant for the better recovery of the premises in yo^{r} suppl^{ts} behalfe And this Compl^{t} further showeth that the said Joseph had of yo^{r} suppl^{t} one watch and one clocke in the said yeare 1628 for w^{ch} the said Joseph was by agreement shortly after to pay yo^{r} suppliant five pounds but he hath not to this day payd the same nor any parte thereof to yo^{r} suppliant. Notwithstanding yo^{r} said suppl^{t} sheweth that the said Joseph did often times both by word of mouth & letters of his acknowledge the said debts & receipt of the said goods & of the said watch & clocke & promised satisfaction of all the premises to the full but when he understood that yo^{r} suppliant had so lost the said specialtyes afores^{d} then the said Joseph refused to performe his said promises or to make payment & satisfaction for the p^{r}mis and still refuseth so to doe Now forasmuch as yo^{r} suppliant hath no remedy by the strict rules of the Common Law but in equity he ought to be relieved in the premises He humbly prayeth yo^{r} worships releife therein according to equity and good Conscience and that the said Compl^{t} may be allowed not only the said principall debts comming in all to 195^{l} or thereabouts but for Dammage and Deteyning of the same all this while w^{ch} comes to 200^{l} more at the least, and yo^{r} suppliant prayeth that the said Joseph may be enjoyned immediately to answere the premises & to stand to yo^{r} wor^{pps} order & decree in the same And yo^{r} suppliant shall pray &c.

1. The Compl^t sheweth that whereas the defendant was to pay him 45^s 8^d for Carpentry worke done at the defendts house by agreement of both partyes and 3^l 19^s 8^d for sawing & squaring of timber & boards and the said last menconed summes the Defend^t unjustly as his owne judge by order of a certaine attachment in his owne person attached and defaulted 3^l 18^s of the same money when he had tendred the said whole summe of six pounds five shillings and foure pence before witnesse saying he attached this money as due unto himselfe never sending the said attach^m to this Compl^t never warning him to any court nor giving him any Coppy of the said attachm^t and deteyned the same in his hands about two moneths, whereby the Plt was not only damnifyed butt the

[1] John Tinker, several times mentioned in the first few pages of the Notebook, was at this time at Windsor, but subsequently was of Boston, and afterwards of New London. The names which follow may be found in Savage, but nothing of consequence is known of them.

[2] There is no mention at all of this case in the Colonial Record. Holland's name may be seen there, in another case, however, of somewhat the same nature (vol. i. p. 152), — where he had to do with a different character from the meek Scobell. This last had not sufficient force of mind even to do anything which should have brought his name down to us (such as being born, marrying, dying, being chosen to oversee fences, and the like). Holland, on the contrary, was well known in Dorchester, — a merchant of good repute, says Savage, and usually honored in the Town Record by the title of Mr.

Magistrates and Justice of the Country dishonoured for w^ch^ the defend^t^ is lyable to a fine and also to satisfye the plt for his dammages aforesaid w^ch^ he alleageth to be ten shillings at the least by Arbitrement of certaine men indifferent and that after much trouble charge & expence of time w^ch^ the defend^t^ wrongfully put the plt to thereabout. [Wm Evans]

2. The Plaintiffe complaineth that when the said Arbitration was to be made he offered the defend^t^ to submit all things w^ch^ were owing by the plaintiffe unto the defend^t^ unto the said Arbitrators to end at once and further offered to pay and allow the said defend^t^ what was due unto him for any cause or thing whatsoever but the defend^t^ intending to circumvent the plt w^th^ faire pretences alleaging the things due to him the said defend^t^ were for womens matters and that he would afterwards put those things to the arbitr^mt^ of any indifferent men persuaded the plt to let his demands only be arbitrated w^ch^ was done accordingly by the said arbitrators But afterwards the said defend^t^ hath unjustly quarrelled against the said arbitrement and demanded of the plaintiffe more than was his defendants due but refused to put his said demands to the arbitrement of any arbitrators contrary to his promise aforesaid. But afterwards and after the said wrongfull attachm^t^ upon the persuasion of some of the Church of Dorchester the said defend^t^ did condescend to submit his said demands to the arbitrement of the two Elders there and this Compl^t^ did also yeild thereunto. Notwithstanding the said defend^t^ after all that trouble to the said Elders & charges and trouble to the plaintiffe in coming from Boston to Dorchester about it twice brake of the said arbitremt because he could not persuade this Compl^t^ to dissolve the said first Arbitracon w^ch^ he knew not whether he might lawfully doe seeing both the said partyes were by writing under their hands bound in 20^l^ apeece to stand to the award of the said first Arbitrators. [Witnesses the Arbitrators. M^r^ Henry Witherington & W^m^ Ware.]

And in the Cort before the Magistrates & the Jury the defend^t^ alleaged that this Compl^t^ had wroaght w^th^ him 25 weekes & brought his servant Edward Emans to witnesse the same upon oath and according to that time demanded for dyet lodging washing & starching for this Compl^{t} & house roome for his goods. [The Cort booke. John Matthewes for begin time John Smith & Richard Evans for the end.]

for dyet from (9) 4 1639. for 6 weekes the plt wrought for meat drink lodging and 20^{d} a day. w^{ch} comes to 45^{s} 8^{d} afterwards till the 3^{d} day of the first mon: $\frac{16}{16}\frac{3}{4}\frac{9}{0}$ the plt was to worke for the defend^{t} in the woods to saw & square timber & boards for halfe the sawing worke [191] or the value thereof and one weeke of this time he was dyetted by the defend^{t} but afterwards dyetted himselfe saving upon last dayes at night & upon the Lords Days during that time.

1. He alleaged & proved by oath in Court that the Compl^{t} had diet last dayes night & Lords dayes 13 or 14. whereas it was but 8 or 9 for the plt wrought wth him but 17 weekes in all so hereby the plt was overreckoned 5^{s} 10^{d}. [W^{m} Evans Agnes Evans Richard Evans.]

2. for washing & starching 8^{s} 6^{d} reckoning 4^{d} a weeke for 25 weekes w^{ch} was 2^{s} 8^{d} too much & besydes the plt lost a band worth 2^{s} w^{ch} is 4^{s} 8^{d} in all. [W^{m} Evans Agnes Evans]

3. the defendant demanded for lodging the plt the said first 5 weekes 3^{s} or thereabouts whereas he was not to pay anything for the same. [John Matthews Ric^{h} Evans.]

4. the defend^{t} demanded for lodging the plt wth his boyes the said last dayes nights & Lords dayes nights 2^{s} 6^{d} when his owne servant lodged upon the pl^{ts} bed at dorchester mill the other five dayes in the weeke w^{ch} at 1^{d} a night comes to 3^{s} so that for this the pl^{t} is to be allowed 5^{s}. [John Smith W^{m} Evans.]

5. the defend^{t} demanded for houseroome of 2 halfe hogsheads 2 chests & one smale box & a case of bottles 8^{s} 6^{d} w^{ch} yet were stowed over a Cowhouse w^{ch} the plt built & was not satisfied for till the time of the said attachment and the defend^{ts} wife & servant hurt some of the plt^{s} tooles yet for 14 weekes houseroome 5^{s} the plt willingly alloweth so that he may have forbearance of his hire of 45^{s} 8^{d} abovesaid. [W^{m} Evans & his wife Agnes.]

6. the defend^{t} demanded 6^{s} for three dayes worke of his in the woods w^{ch} the Comp^{lt} saith was cut off by the said first arbitrement and is another breach of the said arbitrement by the defend^{t}. [Arb: Rich Evans John Math: W^{m} Ware.]

Whereby the plt hath bin put to these losses

1. at the making of the first arbitrement 15^{s}. 2. lost for 2 dayes worke to demand the money on the arbitrement 4^{s} misreckoning & overreckoning 1^{l} 8^{s}. 18^{s} costs of suit losse of time 6^{s}. 2 dayes worke 4^{s} viz^{t} 15^{s} so that the plt hath now no more than just 4^{s} 4^{d} for all his winters worke lost and all through the defend^{ts} fault. JOHN SCOBELL of Boston Carpenter plt
JOHN HOLLAND of Dorchester ferryman def^{t} } in an accon of trespass on the case.

The Pl^{tiffe} complaineth that whereas the defend^{t} was indebted unto the plt about the 10th day of the 10th moneth 1639. in the summe of 45^{s} 8^{d} for carpentry worke done by the plt for the defend^{t} at his house in Dorchester at the rate of twenty pence a Day dyet and lodging by agreement betweene the said plt and defend^{t} and wheras afterwards the said plt was by like agreement betweene them to worke and did worke for the defend^{t} wth one of his servants in the woods in Dorchester bounds in sawing & squaring of timber & boards from about the said 10th day of the said 10th moneth till the 3^{d} day of the first moneth then following for halfe of the said sawing worke or the value thereof and to have meate and drinke of the defend^{t} for 5^{s} a weeke and the plt so had meate & drinke of the defend^{t} for one weeke from the said tenth day but afterwards by agreement also betweene them the said plt was to find and did find himselfe meate & drinke in the woods and whereas the said pl^{t} received some smale comforts of the defend^{t} as houseroome in an outhouse for a few goods last dayes at night suppers & Lords dayes dyet washing & starching lone of a boate & men to fetch the pl^{ts} goods by night and lodging the said last dayes & night &

Lords dayes & nights for w^{ch} ther was no agreement betweene them of any payment to be made by the pl^{t} for the same. [192] The said pl^{t} saith that he upon the said 3rd day of the first moneth upon just cause given by the defend^{t} & his servant left off worke in the woods for the deft and afterwards demanded of him satisfac̃on for the said worke according to the said agreement But the said defend^{t} refusing to let the said pl^{t} have halfe the said sawing worke for his labour aforesayd and going about to deceive the pl^{t} of his just recompence for his labour aforesaid alleaged that the plaintiffe was not to be his owne judge of the worth of his said labour nor should have his owne asking but required the same might be arbitrated betweene them by indifferent men whereto the pl^{t} willingly condescended but the said defend^{t} refused to attend the said arbitrement & delayed the pl^{t} & put to much trouble thereabout so that the pl^{t} was at length forced to sue the defend^{t} at the law & the pl^{t} wth his witnesses & the defend^{t} coming to Boston thereabout upon the 2 day of the 7th mo : 1640 the defend^{t} then & there promised the pl^{t} if that he would withdraw his said ac̃on & put the said matters in controversy betweene them for the said worke to the arbitrac̃on of indifferent men that the defend^{t} would also afterwards put all his demands touching the controversy aforesayd being as he said but womens matters to the arbitrement of men indifferent wthout suit and the said pl^{t} indeed saith that he trusting upon the said promise of the defend^{t} did withdraw the said ac̃on and thereupon the pl^{t} put the same matter of the worke in the woods to the arbitrement and they bound themselves each to other in a bond or assumpsit of 20^{l} a pecce to stand to the arbitrement of indifferent men betweene them that is to say John Mathew Robert Streson Richard Evans and Will^{m} Ware for and about all matters in controversy betweene them the said pl^{t} and defend^{t} touching the said sawing worke & timber wrought & squared in the woods & all things thereabout And the said Arbitrators thereupon awarded that the said defend^{t} should pay the said plt for the same 3^{l} 19^{s} 8^{d} out of w^{ch} the pl^{t} was to allow unto the defend^{t} for worke done for one [blank] Leeds 22^{s} 6^{d} whereof the plt was redy and did offer

the defend^{t} allowance And the plt saith the defend^{t} had notice of the said Arbitrement and being demanded by the Plt to fulfill the same he the defend^{t} pretended he would so do but did not performe the same contrary to his said bond or assumpsit of 20^{l} and deteyned the said 54^{s} 8^{d} nyne or ten moneths and contrary to his promise afores^{d} refused to put his said demands touching the said controversies to the arbitrement of indifferent men and under colour of an attachment w^{ch} he as his owne judge in his owne person executed deteyned the said plts right upon the said arbitrement being 2^{l}. 17^{s}. 2^{d}. two moneths or thereabouts never warning the plaintiffe to appeare at any Court nor giving him any coppy or reading of the said attach^{mt} to him And although the plt and defend^{t} afterwards submitted themselves touching the said defendts demands to the arbitrement of the two ruling Elders of the Church of Dorchester yet the said defend^{t} afterwards when the said Elders mett to consider thereof brake off the said arbitrement because the plt would not dissolve the said first arbitrement touching the said worke in the woods And thereupon the defend^{t} brought his acc̃on for his said demands in the last Court at Boston whereof the plt had but one dayes cleare notice and then and there before the Magistrates & Jury in open Court taking the plt unprovided of his proofes did overreckon the plt and by and under proofes recovered against the plt above thirty shillings more than by any right or reason he was to pay unto the said defend^{t} besydes costs trouble charges and other dammages the plt received thereabout in all 26^{l} And thereupon he brings his suit. The plts proofes.

1. That the defendant owed the plt 45^{s} 8^{d} for carpentry worke done about the 10th of December 1639 and payd him not for it till the last of September 1640. [Cort booke John Mathews W^{m} Evans W^{m} Ware.]

2. That the worke in the woods was to be done on such termes as is declared & began about the said tenth day of the said 10th moneth and ended the 3rd day of the first month following. [Richard Evans Will^{m} Evans.]

3. for the meate & drinke at 5^{s} one weeke. [The defts note.]

4. That the plt had just cause to leave off working for the defend^{t}. [John Smith.]

[193] 5. That the defend^{t} refused to pay the pl^{t} for the worke in the woods without arbitrement and yet would not let it be arbitrated. [Will^{m} Evans Richard Evans.]

6. To prove the promise about withdrawing the pl^{ts} accõn & putting the worke in the woods to arbitrement that thereupon the defend^{t} would put his demands to arbitrement. [The Arbitrators John Mathews W^{m} Ware.]

7. To prove the pl^{ts} withdrawing his accon & the bond or assumpst of 20^{l}. [M^{r} Nowell & the Arbitrat^{rs}.]

8. To prove the award to be as it is declared. [The Arbitrat^{rs}.]

9. That the defend^{t} had notice of the said award made. [The Arbitrat^{rs}.]

10. That the defend^{t} never payd the 2^{l} 17^{s} 2^{d} to the plt although demanded whereby the def^{t} hath forfeited to the said plt the said bond or assumpst of twenty pounds. [W^{m} Evans.]

Objection the defend^{t} attached it.

Answere the plt was never possessed of the money and therefore the award was never fulfilled by the defend^{t}. [W^{m} Evans.]

11. In executing that attachment the defend^{t} was his owne judge and therein committed a cryme to the dishonor of the Magistrates and Judges of the Country w^{ch} is an offence to be punished by the Magistrates. [W^{m} Evans Gill confest in Cort.]

12. The defend^{t} never read the said attachment nor gave a coppy of it to the pl^{t} nor warned him to any Cort thereupon. [Let the Def^{t} prove this if he can.]

13. That the defend^{t} refused to put his demands of the womens matters to arbitrement and quarrelled against the former just arbitrement. [W^{m} Evans.]

14. That afterwards the pl^{t} & defend^{t} submitted themselves touching the defend^{ts} demands to the arbitrement of the two Elders. [M^{r} Henry Witherington & W^{m} Ware.]

15. That after this notwithstanding the defend^{t} brake of the said arbitrem^{t} because the plt would not dissolve & undoe the said first arbitrem^{t} w^{ch} if he should have done the defend^{t} like enough would have taken advantage ag^{t} him thereupon for his 20^{l}. [M^{r} Witherington W^{m} Ware.]

16. That the defend^{t} brought his acc̄on for the said demands for the womens matters in the Cort at Boston whereof the pl^{t} had but one dayes notice, for he heard the defend^{t} would bring it in Court upon the 3rd day & the Cort was the fift. [Will^{m} Ware.]

17. for the defendts overreckoning the pl^{t} & under proofes made in Cort.

[1] Edward Griffith must have been some Englishman or other who turned up at Boston for a short time.

[2] John Hogg is merely noted by Savage, who says, "Mass. 1639. Felt. Perhaps he was only transient." He does not mention Roger in any way.

[3] From the Boston Town Record it appears that a grant of land was made to John Palmer (where or when is not stated), and the same not being built upon, the Town declared itself free to take the land back again. This was March 21, 1636. In 1640, March 30, John Palmer the younger was admitted to be an inhabitant, provided that he could "gett an house or land to sett an house upon (it being not proper to allowe a man an Inhabitant Without habitation)." In 1641, Nov. 29th, there was a grant of land made to John Palmer, Sr., at Braintry for two heads. In the Book of Possessions the two Palmers, father and son, have houses on the north side of Mill Street (now Summer). The father's house was some way down the road; the son's was near the corner (of Washington Street). Curiously enough, there are four Christopher Smiths in Savage, no one of whom can be the man here mentioned. There is noted a Christopher Smith of Hartford, thought to be son of one of the same name having a sister Mary who was married to one William Partridge. John Palmer is thought to have moved to Wethersfield before his death, and it may very well be that this Mary was his widow.

[1] Walter Merry was a shipwright, having his shipyard and wharf at the Point bearing his name, just to the north of Gallup's Point. John Savery I should be tempted to believe to be John Seberry mentioned later (p. 236) in connection with Walter Merry, were it not for the difference in condition. John Seberry is called in the Boston Town Record a seaman, which trade is not incompatible with a shipwright's journeyman.

[2] Thomas Mayhewe senior, most probably, who was this year (as well as in other years) representative from Watertown. Nicholas Davison was a Charlestown merchant, of whom much may be read in Wyman and in the Suffolk Deeds, as well as elsewhere. He was the agent of Matthew Cradock, and in other ways a prominent man. The other arbitrators were among the first merchants of the Colony, and we need not doubt that the case was decided on its merits.

All advantages of exemption to the incertainties & insuffiencies of the said bill of Complt to this defendt now & at all times hereafter saved this defendant for his answere saith that whereas the Complt alleageth in his said bill of Complaint

[1] Nathaniel Bisco [or Brisco] was a rich tanner of Watertown, selectman later in life, and father of the student of the same name who got into trouble with Nathaniel Eaton.

[2] Nathaniel Eaton was not dead, as might from this be supposed, but, on the contrary, was living in Virginia in a manner very horrible to his New England acquaintances, already described in these pages. The other commissioners appointed by the Court to settle the affairs of Eaton were William Jennison and John Bridge. See Mass. Col. Rec., i. 277.

[3] This may have some reference to the business in which the same names appear in the Note-book, p. 159. Thomas Gorges was nephew of Sir Ferdinando Gorges, and was in New England, at York, from 1640 to 1643.

that he was forced to enter into the bill obligatory mentioned in the said bill of complaint this defend^{t} saith that he did not in any unjust manner force the said Comp^{lt} to enter into the said bill obligatory but fairely required him to performe his former ingagement to this defend^{t} for the same under his the Comp^{lts} owne hand writing to this defend^{t} made & delivered the sixt day of January Anno Dñi 1632 as by the same appeareth And whereas the said Comp^{lt} in his said bill of Compl^{t} saith that the said goods & commodities by him received of this defend^{t} whereupon the debt in the said bill obligatory grew were unserviceable & not useful in the Country and lay long on his hands this defend^{t} saith that the most of them were knives & some other things there were amongst them w^{ch} this defend^{t} thought by advise to be best for the Country and about those times this defend^{t} hath bin informed that two or three knives would have traded for a beaver skinne and this defend^{t} saith that the said goods being sent in November 1629 this defend^{t} comming himselfe about two or three yeares after that into the Country would willingly have received the said goods again if the said Comp^{lt} had not traded them away and for anything I know for two or three hundred weight of bever And therefore this defend^{t} saith that he hopeth it standeth wth equity & good Conscience that he should have and recover from the said Comp^{lt} not only the iust debt in the said bill obligatory specifyed but all his dammages [199] lost by the not payment and deteyning of the same w^{ch} comes to 15 pounds above the said debt All w^{ch} matters this defend^{t} humbly offereth unto the wor^{ll} Thomas Gorge Esq^{r} and the rest of the wor^{ll} Commissioners for the Province of Mayne and all & every Competant Judge Chancellor & officer therein the Court of Chancery there established to aver & prove as the said Court shall award and prayeth to be thence dismissed wth his reasonable costs & charges in this behalfe susteyned. THOMAS SYMONDS, NATHANIEL WOODWARD, JOHN BIGGS, WILL^M^ TALLMAGE, Defend^ts^ } in an action of trespasse upon the case.

The said John Cogan complaineth against the said defend^ts^ for that whereas heretofore he did reteyne the said Thomas Symonds to doe a parcell of Carpentry worke for the said plt to be adioyned unto his dwelling house[1] in Boston aforesaid for 80^l^ and the said Thomas Symonds made the low buildings adioyning to the said dwelling house as now they are being not so much in worke as by the first agreement and bargain he was to performe viz^t^ a [illegible] next the garden there and therefore the said Comp^lt^ being not willing to pay the said Thomas Symonds the said whole summe of 80^l^ for the said low buildings there grew a difference betweene him and the said Thomas Symonds about the worth of the Carpentry worke of the said low buildings whereupon the said plt and the said Thomas Symonds agreed and did submit themselves touching the same to the arbitrement of the said Nathaniell Woodward John Biggs & Will^m^ Tallmage and bound themselves each to other in one hundred pounds to stand to their award in the premises w^ch^ the said p^lt^ was the more willing to doe because a sufficient and skillfull carpenter had viewed the said carpentry worke and valued the worth of it at but forty six pounds hoping therefore that the said p^lt^ should have had some good abatement of the said 80^l^ allowed him by the said Arbitrators But the said plt saith that the said Matter being so referred to the arbitrement of the said Arbitrators as aforesaid they

[1] John Cogan's house and shop was next to Mr. John Wilson's land, on the corner of State Street and Washington Street. Nathaniel Woodward here mentioned may be the surveyor and mathematician of that name (Mass. Col. Rec., i. 323, 333), but was more probably his son, of whom little enough is to be found out. John Biggs was one of the early settlers of Boston, having lived in the town since 1630, with some little time spent at Ipswich. He was disarmed with the rest in 1637. Besides living at Ipswich, he spent a few years at Dorchester, and also at Exeter; but was a member of the Artillery Company in Boston in 1641.

the said defend^{ts} all of them unlawfully conspired together to defraud the said pl^{t} and to draw from him for the said worke a greater summe of money than the same was truly worth and thereupon by Conspiracy as aforesaid the said Nathaniell Woodward John Biggs and Will^{m} Talmage awarded that the said pl^{t} should pay unto the said Thomas Symonds for the said Carpentry worke [200] the summe of 140^{l} and thereupon the said Thomas Symonds seeing the same was unjust abated 20^{l} and the sayd pl^{t} payd him the rest being 120^{l} w^{ch} he was obliged to pay as aforesaid although the said worke was not neare worth so much as the said 120^{l} As by certificate under the hands of other indifferent Carpenters by appointment of Authority certified it appeareth to the dammage of the plt 50^{l} and thereupon he brings his suit.

behalfe of one John Upton, the case standeth thus, this defend^{t} was heretofore reteyned by one Thomas Bendight of Yarmouth in the County of Nor^{f} to serve him 4 yeares, who not over into New E himselfe made a letter of Attorney to the Comp^{lt} giving him power to imploy this defend^{t} in the said Compl^{ts} owne service, Whereupon this defend^{t} did serve the said compl^{t} three quarters of a yeare in w^{ch} time this defend^{t} did earne as much money for the said compl^{t} as payd for this def^{ts} passage, Afterwards this def^{t} desired that he might buy his time and not be sould to any other as the said Comp^{lt} had done most of his other servants, the said Compl^{t} therefore demanded of this defend^{t} 25^{l} for the remainder of his said time being 3 yeares and a quarter w^{ch} this def^{t} was then willing the times being then quicke & money plentifull to give him rather than to be so sould, w^{ch} 25^{l} the said defend^{t} hath since payd the pl^{t} in money howbeit this defend^{t} humbly conceiveth it was more than in equity the Comp^{lt} could demand of him and was [204] 10^{l} more than he sould any of his other servants for yet so it might please yo^{r} wor^{pps} that the said Compl^{t} having made this defend^{t} price of 25^{l} for his time as aforesaid took a moneths time to consider of the bargain before he would consider it in w^{ch} time the said John Upton another servant of the Comp^{lts} likewise desired to buy his time w^{ch} was valued by the Compl^{t} at 15^{l} And when the said moneth was expired the said pl^{t} would not take the said 25^{l} of this defend^{t} unlesse he would passe his word for 15^{l} for the said John Upton w^{ch} to purchase his liberty this deft yeilded to doe Now this defendt sheweth that he having payd the Compl^{t} 15^{l} the last summer and 10^{l} the yeare before the same hath caused yo^{r} peticoner to run into divers debts and yet now the said Compl^{t} demands the said 15^{l} of yo^{r} peticoner for the said John Upton w^{ch} this peticoner is no way able to pay being much indebted and w^{ch} in equity he alleageth he is not bound to pay Yo^{r} peticoner humbly prayeth yo^{r} wor^{pps} in tender consideracon of the premises to sett down an order for the discharge of yo^{r} peticoner concerning the said 15^{l} and this peticoner leaveth it to yo^{r} grave consideration whether you will please to order the said Comp^{lt} to pay this peticoner backe any parte of the said 25^{l}

And this petičoner humbly prayeth that the said plt may be injoyned to stand to the order of this Cort in the premises as this defend[t] humbly submitteth himself also to the award & iudgment of the Court & he shall as he is in duty bound pray for yo[r] wor[ps].

To the right wor[ll] the Gov[nor] Council & Ass[ts]

The Answere petičon and account of BARNABAS DAVIS of Charles Towne to the demands of M[r] JOHN WOODCOCKE.

Barnabas Davis[1] sheweth that about 2 yeares before the Pequid warre he was reteyned by M[r] Will[m] Woodcocke to come over into New England to looke to his affaires heere that he landed at Boston and after that w[th]in ten dayes went on foot to Connecticott where Francis Stiles was to build a house for M[r] Woodcocke & impale him 400 acres of ground that this was in the beginning of the plantation there whereby this Accountant indured much hardship When this accountant come there the said Stiles was gone for England having before

[1] Of Barnabas Davis, whose suit against John Woodcocke occupies many pages in the Note-book, nothing seems to be known except that he came in the "Blessing" in 1636 to Charlestown, and that he afterwards was a tallow-chandler by trade. Of the Woodcockes nothing can be found in New England, — naturally enough, as it does not directly appear that they were ever there. There was a John Woodcocke of Springfield in 1638, but I do not believe him to be the one here mentioned. Francis Stiles and Edward Holyoke (or Hollioke here spelled) are, however, easily identified, and much of their history is known. Stiles came to Connecticut very early, was at Windsor in 1636, and afterwards lived perhaps at Saybrook for some time, but died at Windsor in 1653 or thereabouts. He was engaged in Connecticut, among other things in work about the estate of Sir Richard Saltonstall with Robert Saltonstall, the younger son of Sir Richard. His management could not have been very efficient, for he involved the Saltonstalls in much financial inconvenience. Edward Holyoke owned land in many towns, but lived chiefly at Rumney Marsh. He was frequently representative to the General Court, — often, Savage thinks, from towns where he only held property. His family lived in Springfield afterwards; and from the fact that John Woodcocke is noted in Springfield in 1638, I should not think it improbable that Holyoke lived there for a time. He died in 1660.

The whole case admits of very little illustration. The best thing for the reader to do (if he be in any way interested), is to refer to an opinion delivered by Lechford which may be found in the Note-book, p. 216.

built himself a sufficient house at Connecticott Then by Mr Hookers advise this Accountant returned into England againe wth letters from Mr Hooker both to my Lord Say & to Mr Woodcocke of the estate of Mr Woodcockes affairs to the intent Stiles might be dealt withall in England that this accountant as soone as he could get shipping tooke his voyage backe into England wth Mr Bable and landed at Portsmouth and thence he rode to London and delivered his letters Whereupon Francis Styles was againe dealt wth to goe on with Mr Woodcockes plantation there and sold him his said house bearing him in hand that the Towne would accommodate Mr Woodcocke wth 400 acres of land thereunto The said Styles wthin a moneth after came away againe for N E and Mr Woodcocke reteyned this accountant still to goe in the next ship after him to see the said Styles to performe the worke and this accountant was but to goe from London to his wife at Teuxbury and to returne againe to London to take shipping wch this accountant did and came into New England the second time and landed at Boston in the yeare of the Pequid warres and wthin ten dayes after went in a pinnace to Connecticott to follow Mr Woodcockes businesse and delivered my Lord Says letter and Mr Woodcockes letter to Mr Hooker who was pleased to goe wth this accountant from Mr Hookers house to the sayd Styles house being 6 myles about treaty wth the said Styles when it was dangerous travelling in regard of the Pequids that Mr Warham and divers others wth Mr Hooker treating the cause determined that Styles had dealt ill wth Mr Woodcocke in not procuring the 400 acres of land to be layd to the said house & impaling it as he undertooke whereupon this accountant was by Mr Hookers direccon to returne wth his letters thereof into England againe to certify my Lord Say and Mr Woodcocke of Styles miscarriage of the businesse but in the meane while before this Accountant could get shipping he was taken a Souldier against the Pequids and before he could thence returne & get shipping in the sea neare upon a yeare was spent from his last landing That he returned wth Mr Cutter at the time Mr Vane returned landed at Deale and thence went to London on foote and delivered the letters to

Mr Woodcocke & a letter to my Lord Say [205] That this accountant was afterwards reteyned by the said Mr Woodcocke to ride from Teuxbury to London nine or ten times and from London into Essex about twelve times and from London to Dunstable & from London to Bristoll and after to and fro upon his occasions and did reteyne this accountant from his last landing in his service in England neare a yeare & three quarters. That the said accountant purposing at his first voyage aforesaid to come for New E wth his wife and family as a planter he brought up his wife & children & goods to London to that purpose but Mr Woodcocke prevayled wth his wife to stay in England to the end this accountant might serve him only in this busines aforesaid and that this accountant should in the meane time leave his goods as bedding brasse & pewter to the value of 20l wth Mr Woodcocke to keepe till his businesse was settled & then this accountant to fetch his wife & family & live upon Mr Woodcockes plantation to improve the same for him. That Mr Woodcocke made use of this accountants goods and wore out a brasse kettle & pott to holes so that the said goods were 5l the worse. That the said Mr Woodcocke never yet gave this accountant any recompense for his sayd travell & paynes but as in the account annexed is specifyed and afterwards the said Mr Woodcocke deceased Whereupon Mr John Woodcocke brother of the said deceased intreated Mr Robert Bridges of Anster to send for this accountant to Teuxbury to treat wth him about Mr Willm Woodcockes estate in N E. & thereupon come to Anster and informed Mr Bridges of the said estate and this accounts expences & his acts & paines thereabouts that the said Mr Bridges might thereof certify the said John Woodcocke he did alsc reteyne this accountant to come over againe into New England about the said estate and to recover the same against the said Stiles for wch this accountant was to have 20l. That he landed here at Boston in June 1639 and thereupon went to Connect and there did recover of the said Styles a judgment of 300l wch lyes in Mr Hopkins hand in Connecticott and tooke into his custody the cattell and sold them by advise of Mr Hollioke & Mr Bridges of Lynne for wch cattell this accountant received 150l and since that time he hath bought as many cattell as came to 110l. That this accountant is now reteyned & still intangled w^th^ this imployment & estate & cannot be lawfully discharged thereof whereby he hath lost divers advantages for himself having yet no land to plant of his owne for himselfe & his wife & 4 children & family whereby he is damnifyed at least 50l Therefore he requireth allowance of his said accounts recompense of his dammages aforesaid & a sufficient discharge from M^rs^ Washburne Administratrix of the goods & chattells of the said Will^m^ Woodcocke and from the said John Woodcocke both for himselfe & M^r^ Hopkins who is interest in this matter only by this accountants meanes & procurement.

Samuell Milles of Weymouth in New England aged about 21 yeares servant of M^{r} Henry Waltham sworne saith upon his oath that about two moneths since Morgan Craver singing in the mill house by the fire one of Situate came into the said house What he said to Morgan this deponent did not heare but he heard Morgan answer that he did not sing so loude but we may heare the clap of the mill. Whereupon M^{ris} Richards came forth and said that She heretofore asked money of the said M^{r} Waltham and he bad her hold her peace that he might heare the clap of the mill and then said to Morgan this thou hast learned of thy master that old Waltham that wicked man he that never feared God nor never will. And Morgan speaking something what in particulare this deponent cannot remember the said M^{ris} Richards in the hearing of John Gill[1] bid him hold his peace or els she would make John Gill bast him by & by and thereupon as the said Morgan talked further to her the said John Gill wth his left hand strucke the said Morgan upon his head and said hold yo^{r} tounge. And at another time upon another occasion what in particulare this deponent cannot remember he saith he heard the said M^{ris} Richards speake in the mill roome he standing by the trough there the like reproachfull words against his said M^{r} that is to say that old Waltham that wicked man he that never feared God nor never will.

A peticon for John Morecroft.[2] [1*s.*]

[1] John Gill is somewhat interesting here because a man of his name bought (in 1673) the mill of Israel Stoughton in Dorchester (now Milton). I am unable, however, to affirm confidently that he was the same man who struck Morgan Craver upon his head and bade him hold his tongue. It would seem from this as though the relations between the owners of the mill at Weymouth were not everything that could be wished.

[2] This petition, I imagine, was to entreat the Court to grant some abatement of the fine of 20^{l} which had been imposed upon John Morecroft by the Court some days before this "for his unfit carriage." I cannot find that it was ever granted.

[2] Robert Thompson is not to be met with in Savage, and the only mention of him found by me is in the Book of Possessions, where in a deed of land from Edward Bendall to Thomas Hawkins, 1650, a lot of land is spoken of as having belonged to Mr. Robert Thompson (Book of Possessions, G, 124). Its position is not defined, but it was near the lots of Nehemiah Bourne, Thomas Hawkins,

[1] William Phillips is noted in Wyman as an innholder of Charlestown who moved away to the Eastward. Reference is also there made to this purchase of land, though what was purchased is not stated, nor what was paid for it. Phillips lived afterwards in Saco, where he behaved with much courage in the Indian wars, as may be read in Savage; he came back, however, to Boston, and there died.

[2] Robert Shute lived at Pemaquid later, with his brother Richard. He is next mentioned in the Note-book in a transaction far less creditable to him than the present (post, p. 219). Mathew Norman does not appear in Savage.

[3] Mr. Thomas Wallis is among the list of those taking the freeman's oath, May 10, 1643; but otherwise there is no mention of him. Henry Watts is noted in Savage at different points in the Province of Maine. He became freeman of Massachusetts in 1659, and was then chosen constable. He was representative in 1660 and 1661, after which little is known of him.

[1] This letter is written by Barnabas Davis on his affairs in regard to the Woodcocke suit to one Mr. Lygon, of whom I find note in Mr. Trumbull's MS. index as follows: "Richard Lygon, Esq., of Madresfield, co. Worcester, ob. 3 p. 15, and buried 18 April 1687, at Madresfd, — was 1st husband of Anne, eldest daughter of Sir Francis Russel, of Strensham, co. Worcester, bart., and niece of Sir Wm. Sytton. [His wife (Anne) was born after 1662.] Perry's Hert's Geneal., p. 6."

The introduction at the end of the letter of Nayman, Mr. Antony Swimmer's brother, is puzzling. I have not found either name. This letter I suppose to have been carried by Lechford himself, who went home in the August of this year, though it may be another one which is referred to in the Note-book, p. 220.

Good ffather I shall intreate you & my brother Reade to be pleased to call to minde these particulares following w^ch^ I am

[1] George Denison was one of three brothers who at this time lived in Roxbury. His wife Bridget died in 1643, and he himself went to England, where he gained some military experience in the civil wars and also married a second wife, with whom he came back to this country. He turned his military knowledge to account in King Philip's war, where he behaved with much bravery. He died in 1694.

[2] Lewis Kidby is called by Savage a fisherman. He lived at this time, I suppose, on a house-lot which had been granted to him in 1639, near Mr. Bellingham's marsh-lots, on the Town Cove.

[3] Thomas Page is called in Savage a tailor, but he may have been a "gent" for all that. The name of Lucar is among the freemen at Newport, 1650, but with the Christian name Mark instead of Robert.

to make proofe of in New England. You knowe that about five yeares since M^{r} Will^{m} Woodcocke did reteyne me by writing betweene us to come over into New England to follow his businesses heere that I was to have of him after the rate of 10^{l} a yeare for my travaile & my charges borne that I tooke shipping for New England about the time of Easter 1635 That I returned againe into England the same yeare about the beginning of March — that I went upon the same agreement the second time for the said M^{r} Woodcocke into New England and tooke shipping thither about the time of Easter in the yeare of our Lord 1636 that I returned againe into England about Sept in the yeare 1637. That M^{r} William Woodcocke used me in divers businesses as his servant and attendant from that time till the day of his death w^{ch} was about a yeare & three quarters that in that time I rode divers journeys from Teuxbury to London to attend upon him 9 or 10 times from London to Hodgwells in Essex and another place as farre about 12 times from London to Bristoll once from London to Dunstable once. That I intended to come into New Engl: as a planter at the time of my first voyage & to that end brought my wife & family & goods to London but M^{r} Woodcocke prevayled wth my wife to stay behind and to send me about his business bearing me in hand that I should when his plantation was prepared come over & fetch my wife & live upon his lands to improve them for him, and in the meane while to leave wth him my goods, as bedding brasse pewter & other things of the value of 20^{l} or more, that these goods remained from that time till the day of his death he having used them in his house & spoyled some of them so that they were I conceive you or one of you may knowe 5^{l} the worse. That I often complayned to you that M^{r} Woodcocke had not satisfyed me for my service and charges, I thinke you good father once did ride to London to speake to M^{r} Woodcocke in my absence for 5^{l} w^{ch} should have bin by covenant payd to my wife but was not and that by reason M^{r} Woodcocke did not pay me for my travell & charges I was hindered from coming into N. E. till after his death I intreate you good father to write yo^{r} lett^{r} to the Governor of the Mattachusetts bay in N E for the

[212] John Palmer[1] of Hingham seaman aged about 40. yeares sworne saith upon his oath that about 4 yeares since he came to dwell at Hingham and shortly after one Nicholas Jacob procured this deponent to goe fetch a load of hay for the widow Large and this deponent commending the hay when he saw it said it was prety good hay yea said Nicholas Jacob

[1] This John Palmer of course is not the man who got into difficulties with his father (ante, p. 194). This one is merely noted by Savage, who says that he may have moved to Scituate. Nicholas Jacob came to New England in 1633, and moved from Watertown, where he had first lived, to Hingham in 1635. He was a representative in 1648 and in 1649. He died in 1659. The Widow Large I take to be the relict of one William Large, who came to Hingham in 1635. He is said by Savage to have removed to Cape Cod, but he may also have made the longer journey which would have justified his wife in assuming the title in the text.

you might have had as much hay on yor[r] owne lott as would have wintered yo[r] cow why said this deponent hath the widdow Large any lott heere? No said Jacob it is one Mathew Hernes lott who is gone for England & it is thought he will come no more or words to this purpose. [nil gains:]

[1] The names are read "Cutting" by Savage, who notices them in his Dictionary. They are certainly not Cutting in Lechford, but more like Cutten. The younger was a shipmaster who made many voyages in his time.

[2] The ship "Desire," of Marblehead, is spoken of several times in Winthrop. She was built at Marblehead in 1636, and her captain, for some voyages at least, was William Pierce, who was in 1641 absent in the West Indies on that cruise whereon he met his death; so it is likely enough that John Cutten was at this time the master of the ship.

[3] Leonard Buttler is of course the same man alluded to before in the Note-book, with different spelling of his last name. John Whittingham came from Lincolnshire in England, being the grandson of William Whittingham, Dean of Durham in the time of Elizabeth.

[4] Matthew Woodrow [or Woodruff] was one of the first settlers of Farmington. Isaac Haynes would seem as though he might be a relative of John Haynes.

I should think he was at this time. He was admitted freeman of Plymouth 1658, and died in Boston 1677. Savage names two sons, and thinks he must have had other children. One of them I take to have married John Friend, a carpenter, who lived at different times in many parts of New England, but was probably now living in Boston, where he was allowed to be an inhabitant March 30, 1640.

[1] George Alcocke died Dec. 30, 1640, or thereabouts. (See p. 148, ante.) Philip Eliot was brother of Jacob Eliot, mentioned above (pp. 151, 153), and of the Rev. John Eliot, the apostle. He came, it is thought, about 1635 to Roxbury, where he was a deacon in the church. William Parke came to Boston in 1631 with Roger Williams in the "Lion." He served thirty-three years in the General Court, and died in 1687. All that Savage can tell about Jeremy Blackwell is that he came in the "Truelove" in 1635 at the age of eighteen. We do not learn so much even as this from the entries above. Edward Burcham, of Lynn, clerk of the writs in 1645, went back to England 1656.

George Burcham of London merchant bound to Jeremie Blackwell in 17^{l} Condiconed that if 17^{l} be payd by John Blackwell unto one M^{r} [blan] Too according to the intent & true meaning of certaine bills of exchange heretofore for the same drawne & signed by the said Jeremy then the said George shall pay unto the said Jeremy his executors &c 8^{l} 10^{s} upon demand & sufficient notice of the same 17^{l} so payd.

[The above entry is crossed out.]

Whereas Jeremy Blackwell heretofore owed me George Burchum of Lincolne mercer the summe of 8^{l} 10^{s} upon accounts of bargaines betweene him & me whereupon according to agreement betweene us the said Jeremie drewe & signed a letter of Attorney for seventeene pounds to be payd by his brother John Blackwell unto Jonathan Newcomen mercer dwelling on London bridge And whereas afterwards the said Jeremie Blackwell gave me a bill or writing for the payment of the said 8 and 10^{s} wth reasonable dammages for the whole 17^{l} abovesaid to me heere in New England Now I doe declare that the said last mentioned bill or writing was given me by him for security of payment of the said 17 pounds and therefore if the same be or shall be accordingly payd in England then the said bill or writing of 8^{l} 10^{s} & the penalty thereupon is to be voyd & of none effect & shall be delivered up & cancelled & also I shall & will satisfie & pay or cause to be payd unto him his executors adm^{rs} or assignes the summe of 8^{l} 10^{s} upon sufficient notice of the said 17^{l} so payd & upon demand made to me or Edward Burchum of Lynne in New England witnesse my hand the 23th of the 2. moneth 1641. John Long of Weymouth in New England husbandman aged about twenty foure yeares sworne saith upon his oath that whereas Mary Lane was to serve Richard Silvester[1] of Weymouth aforesaid for the space of foure yeares or therabouts from about the beginning of the first moneth last as this deponent hath credibly heard, one Edward Pole[2] of Weymouth in the first moneth aforesaid was Desirous to marry her & to buy out her time of service aforesaid and in this deponents hearing did promise to pay unto the said Richard Silvester for the same two hundred foot of boards and foure pounds in money or such good commodities as he should like of upon Midsomer eve next & then the said Pole was to take her away & marry her. [1—0]

[215] Mary Sherman[3] came to my wife the twelveth day of Aprill, 1641.

[1] Richard Silvester, of Weymouth, had come to New England in 1630. A few years before this mention, in 1639, however, getting into some trouble with the Colonial Government, he sold his estate, and shortly afterwards moved to Scituate, under the jurisdiction of the Plymouth Colony.

[2] Edward Pole here mentioned must have been Edward Poole, of Newport, who, according to Savage, passed most of his time at Weymouth (naturally enough, considering the attraction). His will (1664) gives the names of seven children, but not of his wife, who was named executrix, so that we cannot tell with certainty how this matter turned out. Of the difficulty of identifying this or any other John Long of this period we have already spoken (p. 113, ante).

[3] Mary Sherman I should like to think was the woman interested in Captain Keayne's sow. From an affidavit of Lechford's later in the Notebook (p. 234), and various entries in the earlier part (pp. 66, 84), it appears that he had relations with Story and Thomas Rawlins of Weymouth in New England ffisherman aged about 33. yeares sworne saith upon his oath that in or about Oct last he heard John King of Weymouth seaman undertake unto Thomas Applegate[1] of Weymouth planter to goe in his boate as Master thereof if an other man could be gotten by either of them to goe wth him the said John King to help manage the said boate and they agreed together that the said John King should have his owne parte of the fishe taken by himselfe in the s^{d} boate freight free & that the said Thomas Applegate should have the 4th penny of freight of goods carryed in the said boate and that if the boate or any goods therein should be miscarryed cast away or hurt by the ill ordering or laying of the said boate the said John King should beare the dammage thereof and their words & agreement were to this purpose.

George Allen of Weymouth in New England planter aged about twenty one yeares sworne saith upon his oath that about the beginning of November last one day late wthin night he was present in the house of John King of Weymouth seaman Master of Thomas Applegates boate & there heard the said John King say to William Newland that he would not stand to the adventure of the goods of the said William Newland laden in the said boate if that one hogshead of salt more of his were put into the same boate, whereto the said Newland answered that nothwithstanding he would have the said hogshead put into the said boate that night and if the boate were overladen in the morning some of the said goods might be againe taken out therof or words to that purpose and here-the Shermans, though he may not have been intimate with them. This mention and that above (p. 175) seem to me to refer to Mr. Sherman and his wife. Savage, however, thinks that the woman's name was Elizabeth.

[1] Thomas Applegate, of Weymouth, is spoken of once or twice in the Colonial Record. In 1635 he was licensed to keep a ferry between Wessaguscus and Mount Wollaston; and though the next year he was discharged therefrom, it seems from later entries, where inquiries are made as to certain persons drowned from a canoe, that he continued the business in 1638, though possibly one William Blanter was the regular ferryman at the time (Mass. Col. Rec., i. 156, 165, 246, 249). George Allen, John King, and Thomas Rawlins were all inhabitants of Weymouth at this time, as may be seen in Savage.

upon this Deponent w^th^ others did help put in the said hogshead that night into the said boate & in the next morning the boate did not rise but sunke to that side where the said hogshead lay and this deponent knoweth that the said boate did rise well enough one tyde when the rest of the said goods besides the said hogshead were in it.

[2]Elizabeth Blackborne wife of Walter Blackborne late of Boston in N E shopkeeper for & in the name of her said husband by vertue of a letter of Attorney to her made by him dated &c selles unto Francis Lisle[3] of Boston aforesaid

[1] Thomas Coccrey is the nearest to the MS. that I have been able to get for this man's name, but no name with any resemblance thereto is to be found in Savage. George Carr was an Ipswich man originally, but moved to Salisbury with the first settlers of the town. He was then a person of some esteem, married, and having children.

[2] This transaction is noticed in Suff. Deeds (vol. i. p. 20), where may be found the letter of attorney and will of Walter Blackborne, about to set out for England in the "Desire," as well as a mention of the deeds in the Note-book.

[3] Francis Lisle was a barber and surgeon of Boston. The lot of land here spoken of was on Washington Street, very nearly opposite the spot where the Old South now stands. He had also a lot in the new field. With several other New Englanders he went to Old England during the Civil War, where he served as surgeon in the Earl of Man-

[217] [2]The said John Woodcocke by his Attorney the said M^r. Holliocke demands an account of the said Barnabas Davies for 150^l received by him for certaine cattell w^ch belonged to William Woodcocke brother of the said John and for the halfe of the profitts of two carpenters service the joynt servants of the said John Woodcocke & Barnabas Davies & for some other moneys received by the said Barnabas to the use of the said John Woodcocke.

The said Barnabas accounted shewing that w^th the said 150^l he bought other cattell & afterwards exchanged them for six oxen & a carte w^ch he was & is ready to deliver unto the pl^ts said Attorn^y whereof and of the profits gained by them & his charges about all the said cattell & moneys received the said Barnabas makes his reasonable account, & for the said carpenters service & the profits thereof he saith he is redy to allowe halfe the profits thereof to the said John Woodcocke provided that he beare halfe charges concerning them according to equity, as appeareth by the account of the said Barnabas exhibited into the Court. Barnabas Davies in his suit demands allowance of his reasonable charges and payment of his sallary or wages for his services voyages & travailes undergone as well for the said William as for the said John together wth recompense for certaine dammages as appeareth in the said account and alleadgeth that 64^{l} 10^{s} 10^{d} or therabouts is due unto the said Barnabas for his said charges & sallary besides the said dammages.

[1] Edward Hall, of Duxbury, is noted in Savage and in Winsor. He was later of Taunton, then of Bridgewater, and left the Colony a debtor in 1652, says Winsor.

[2] This written opinion of Lechford on the Barnabas Davis case does not throw any additional light on the statements and affidavits of pp. 204, 210, and 211, though it is a good summing up.

The Court was cleare in this that the said Barnabas was in equity to be payd for his service & travailes undergone as well for the said William as for the said John & all dammages chargeable upon either in as much as the same estate was first Williams & by him conveyed to his said brother John and that the said Barnabas was imployed by both of them.

The Jury gave a speciall verdit w^{ch} is entered to this effect that the said M^{r} Edward Holliocke for the said M^{r} John Woodcocke shall have all such money goods & cattell as shall be found M^{r} Woodcocks & halfe the carpenters & 10^{s} costs & what [a few words of untranslated cipher here] and M^{r} Holliocke is to give the said Barnabas Davies what shall appeare due upon a iust account and he to have dammage for his money since demanded & M^{r} William Tynge & M^{r} Thomas Lechford were appointed Auditors. Whereupon M^{r} Holyoke demands & Barnabe Davis delivers the said six oxen & carte to the said M^{r} Holyoke according to the said verdict & order. At the day appointed for the audit the said M^{r} Holyoke demanded the account to be examined onely about Barnaby Davis his agency for John Woodcocke & saith that was the meaning of the Court Jury verdict & order and alleageth that he the said M^{r} Holyoke thinks any accompts for William Woodcocke deceased were not to be agitated till he heard from England about William Woodcocks dealings wth Barnabe Davies or to this effect.

Barnabas Davies alleadgeth that he conceives the Court intended that his account should be heard both for William Woodcockes & John Woodcockes occasions & services done by the said Barnabas Davies and is unwilling the Auditors should proceed unlesse M^{r}. Holyoke will yeeld therto which he denying ut supra the said Auditors certify that they conceive thereupon (& not finding Will^{m} Woodcocke mentioned in the said order of Court or verdit) that the service expected from them could not be effectually accomplisht.

Questions hereupon.

1. Whether or no the Court & Jury by the said words in the verdict that M^{r}. Holliocke should give Barnabas Davies what shall appeare due upon a just account did not intend the said Barnabas Davis his account touching both the said brothers William & John Woodcock?

2. Whether or no it be equall that Barnabas Davies being now out of possession of any parte of the estate equall in any measure to his demands be stayed from his remedy till information be had from England from I knowe not whome nor when nor by whome.

[218] Having perused the case of Barnabas Davies and his account & all things therto belonging w^{ch} he hath shewed me I conceive opinion that the verdit might have bin made by the Jury or at least entered more certaine & plaine than it is yet doe not doubt but the Court will adjudge it to be just & equall that the account ought to be heard and allowed as well for William as John Woodcocks services & that Barnabas Davis shall have his speedy reasonable allowances & remedy according to the equity of the Statute of Westm^{r} 2. 10 or 11th and so had Joseph Bachellor his present allowances against James Brocke Attorney for M^{r} Paramor[1] of the Isle of Thanet allowed here in New England, upon the account, and divers actions have bin brought here against the Attorneys & Agents of others in England & recovered without stay to heare the partyes owne answere out of England. Neverthelesse I thinke it equall that if hereafter Mr. Holyoke can shewe any discharge or acquittance which will cutt off any parte of Barnabas Davis demands that then he should repay the same & give security so to doe. Furthermore to give what light I may to the Auditors or Jurors that shall hereafter deale in this businesse & for the better & more speedy ending of the same I thinke good to deliver my opinion in some other particulares incident to the cause. And first I doe conceive that Barnabas Davis being a servant bayliffe & Attorney for Mr. William & Mr. John Woodcocke is to be believed in his account for all voyages travailes services costs & charges receipts & disbursements by him made for them unlesse they or their Attorney Mr. Holyoke can disprove the same, especially if the said Barnabas Davis deliver his said account upon his oath & so was the said Joseph Bachellor believed in his account for it would be an infinite & allmost impossible worke to prove every particulare by witnesses remaining both heere & in England dispersedly besides servants are by their masters trusted from the beginning of their imployment & if they doe deceive their masters they are in fault to trust such servants & therefore it must be presumed the servants are faithfull els their masters would not trust them: Neverthelesse Barnabas Davis should doe well to make as good proofe as he can.

Secondly I conceive that if Barnabas Davis cannot prove what in particulare his sallary should be that the same ought to be assessed by the Auditors or by a Jury so it be not above his demands.

Thirdly that if Barnabas Davis canne prove that besides his said sallary he was to live upon Mr. William & Mr. John Woodcocks plantation to improve the same for them as their bayliffe or Lessee for such other consideration as should be thought equall, then because he hath bin hereby hindered five yeares from planting for himselfe in this Country I conceive his dammages herein also are to be assessed by the Auditors or a Jury so it be not above his demands for no man can thinke it reasonable that Barnabas Davis should mannage a ffarme of 400 acres wth stocke thereon onely for 4s a weeke sallary according to w^{ch} rate onely he hath demanded for his sallary being as it seems the originall agreement wth M^{r} Will^{m} Woodcocke that 4^{s} a weeke was to be Barnabas Davis his wages till the ffarme should be recovered & that was to be upon the second voyage at latest & allthough then it were not recovered nor is yet notwithstanding now M^{r} John Woodcocke hath recovered dammages for the same and therfore Barnabas Davis is to have his dammages also. Neverthelesse because M^{r} John Woodcocke is not yet in possession of all that he hath recovered & the estate is much impaired by the fall of cattle &c the Court will no doubt have consideration hereof in mitigating the dammages & so direct the Jurors or Auditors that shall have to deale herein.

Fourthly that if Barnabas Davis can prove that before M^{r} Holyokes acc̃on brought he offered to agree wth him on reasonable terms & to deliver him the oxen & carte if he would pay & allowe unto the said Barnabas what should be found his due then I conceive the said 10^{s} costs given against him are to be discharged.

Fifthly upon the same ground I conceive he is to be discharged of any pretence of dammages for any supposed impaire of the estate since M^{r} Holyokes letter of Attorney shewed to Barnabas Davis: for that it is both law & equity & so declared by the said Law of Westm^{r} the second that Accountants in w^{ch} number are Bayliffs receivers chamberlains servants &c are to be allowed their reasonable expences & costs & therefore that this case differeth from crosse debts & acc̃ons at Lawe betweene party & party where stoppage is no payment, yet by course of equity such stoppages are often made [and may be [219] levyed in the Sheriffs hands redy to be delivered to the party yet if the defend^{t} shewe the King in Chancery that the plaintife is departing the Kingdome and that the defend^{t} hath no means to recover his debt of the pltiff when he is gone: the Court will in some cases award a ne exeat regnum & cause the Sheriffe to bring in the money into Court all w^{ch} is but equall & oftentimes in practise. — all between these brackets crossed out.] 2ly all dammages for and about these businesses of Will^{m} & John Woodcocke are of the nature of expences unto Barnabas Davis if not expense of his money yet of his time & other losses as precious as money and therfore M^r^ Holyoke could not say to Barnabas Davis render me an account for John Woodcocke & recover your owne as you can.

Sixtly I conceive that although the verdit be that M^r^ Holyoke shall give Barnabas Davis what shall appeare due upon a just account yet that M^r^ Holyoke is not chargeable herewith out of his owne estate but out of M^r^ John Woodcocks & such as are or shall come to the hands of the said M^r^ Holyoke.

Seventhly that if any of the cattell dye or be dead in M^r^ Holyokes hands w^th^out his default he is neither to answere them to John Woodcocke nor Barnabas Davis.

Boston 3. 26. 1641.

All which at the request of the said Barnabas Davis I have made bould to deliver as my opinion in the premises the rather because I desire not to be further interested in this matter which neverthelesse I humbly submitt to the Judgment of the Court.

THO: LECHFORD.

Thomas Purches[2] of Pagiscot gent makes a letter of Attorney unto M^r^ John Olliver g Thomas Lechford g George

[1] Robert Saltonstall was at this time at Windsor, Conn. This agreement probably has some connection with the letter of attorney on p. 189 from Robert Keayne to one Tinker, of Windsor, to collect several debts, and among others 50l from Robert Saltonstall. Robert was a younger son of the baronet, and was engaged at Windsor in looking out for some property of his own and his brother's, in which he was assisted by Francis Styles, who appears in the Barnabas Davis case, and by him led into such expenditure as inconvenienced the whole family in later years.

[2] Thomas Purches, of Pagiscot, was one of the many adventurers who crowded the shores of Maine in the early times of the Colony, and of more ability and discretion, apparently, than

Dier of dorchester pl: & John Gallop of Boston mariner ioyntly or severally to sue Robert Morgan of Pemmaquid James Smith of Wayquait Robert Shute & Arthur Browne of Winniganset for trespasse on the case in wrongfully taking away 44 moose skins of the value of 50l out of the house of the said Mr Purches & converting the same to their owne use wch skins were left there by Abacodusset an Indian Saggamore of Kennebecke in trust with the said Thomas Purches so that afterwards the said Indian repaired to the said Mr Purches for satisfaccon for the said skinnes & hath received some satisfaction & relyeth upon him for full satisfaccon for the same & was not in a little danger of his life & the lives of his wife & family therabout & further hath lost divers advantages of trade wth the said Saggamore & all his company & undergone scandall among the English before the truth was knowne wch lay hid a yeare & halfe from the fact done to his dammage 500l. [3—4]

Knowe all men by these presents that I Thomas Purches of Pagiscot in New England gent doe hereby in my place put John Oliver gent Thomas Lechford gent George Dier[1] planter & John Gallop[2] marriner my Attorneys joyntly or severally against Robert Morgan of Pemmaquid James Smith of Way-most of his kind. He came over in 1628; afterwards was one of the chief men at the settlement of Pagiscot or Pegypscott, at the mouth of the Androscoggin River. A deed of this land to Governor Winthrop and the rest of the Massachusetts Colony may be seen in the Mass. Col. Rec., i. 272, signed by Thomas Purches. Towards the end of his life he lived in Lynn, having been troubled by the Indian wars which ravaged the region of his former home. He died in 1678.

[1] George Dyer, of Dorchester, where he was a man of some prominence, is often mentioned in the Dorchester Records.

[2] John Gallop, of Boston, mariner, is known to posterity from the name Gallop's Point, which was given to the first point of land on the peninsula north of the Town Cove. The next was called Merry's Point, after Walter Merry, and the next Hudson's Point, after Francis Hudson the fisherman. Gallop was a fisherman and pilot, and lived partly in Boston, where he had a house on the road running by the seaside, just south of Gallop's Point. The other names here are hardly worth inquiring about. They may all be found in Savage as inhabitants of some one of the towns along the coast of Maine. Robert Shute and Arthur Brown have appeared in the Note-book before (pp. 137 and 209), but neither is of consequence.

quait Robert Shute & Arthur Browne of Winniganset in an accõn of trespasse on the case scilicet ffor that they the said Robert James Robert & Arthur upon the [blank] day of [blank] in the fifteenth yeare of the raigne of the Kings Mat^te^ that now is my [220] house at [blank] did break and enter and there did take & carry away & convert to their owne use forty foure moose skinnes of the value of fifty pounds w^ch^ were there before that time left in trust w^th^ me by Abacodusset an Indian Saggamore of Kennebecke so that afterwards the said Saggamore with his company repayred to me for satisfaction for the said moose skinnes & I was necessitated to give him satisfaction in parte and to promise him full satisfaction for the same for w^ch^ he relyeth upon me and hereby I was not in a little danger of my life and the lives of my wife & family & further I have thereby lost divers goods profits & advantages of trade with the said Saggamore & all his company & have undergone great scandall among both the English and Indians to my dammage five hundred pounds starling. the same of them to recover. And to that end them to sue arrest impleade imprison for me & in my name Witnesse my hand & seale the last day of May Anno Dñi 1641.

IN THE COURT OF 4. 2. 1641.

RICHARD CHADWELL[1] shipwright plaintiffe
JOHN SAMPSON & SAMUELL BENNET defend^t^ } in an accõn of trespasse on the case.

The said Richard Shadwell complaineth against the defend^ts^ for that wheras Francis Toby of Rotherhith in the County of Surrey shipwright in or about June 1635 placed the said John Sampson & the said John Sampson placed himselfe apprentice w^th^ the plaintiffe for the terme of five yeares then next ensuing the said Sampsons Indenture of Apprenticeship nothwithstanding w^ch^ were not [illegible] or assigned to the plaintiffe

[1] The spelling of Chadwell's name is doubtful in this entry, where it looks as though it began with an S. Chadwell is, I think, the more correct. This case may be remembered; see p. 206, ante. Samuel Bennet was a carpenter of Lynn.

and the plaintiffe refused to receive him for lesse than five yeares and the said Sampson consented to serve the plaintiffe five yeares rather than to serve John Tucker an house carpenter 7 yeares in consideration the said Plaintiffe was a shipwright & in that art promised to instruct the said Sampson and whereas the said John Sampson served the plaintiffe three yeares of the said five yeares but in an ill & undutifull manner, in which time the plaintiffe by himselfe & his brother endevoured to instruct the said Sampson in the art of a shipwright but he was most times either incapable therof or unwilling to it, so that when the pl^{tiffe} had procured Richard Hollingworth of Salem Shipwright to teach the said Sampson the said trade he refused to goe dwell with the said Hollingworth but chose rather to goe dwell with the said Samuell Bennet an House carpenter the said Bennet having before unlawfully slocked [or flocked?] & enticed the said Sampson to come away from the plaintiffe to serve him the said Bennet Whereupon the said Sampson being an ill servant before & through the said slocking [or flocking?] & enticeing made worse & more unwilling the said plaintiffe assigned the said Sampson & he put himselfe apprentice unto the said Bennet for the said last two yeares of the said five yeares for w^{ch} service the said Bennet was to pay the p^{lt} 11l. And the said Sampson in recompense of his said undutiful service & other things was to pay the plaintiffe five pounds. And the plaintiffe further sheweth that wheras He came to demand the said 11l of the said Bennet at the last quarter Court in Boston & was then unprovided for his defence in other the premises Now the said Richard Shadwell complaineth that the said defend^{ts} then ioyned together not onely to deceive the plaintiffe of the said 11l and 5l but to damnify him further than they had formerly the one by ill & undutifull service & the other by slocking & enticeing him away as aforesaid and upon this ioyning together contrived that the said John Sampson should bring an acc̃on against the said plaintiffe upon an Indenture to w^{ch} the said plaintife was neither party nor privy and first [221] for not teaching the said Sampson the said trade of a shipwright according to the said indenture and secondly for deteyning

And hereby the plaintiffe saith he hath suffered in his good name & estate and hath bin damnified 50^l and therupon he brings his suit. [3 — 4 Thomas Nicholls testis.]

The petiĉon of some of the Inhabitants of Hingham that wheras the Cort heretofore gave the Towne certaine lands for enlargement at Conihasset[1] to be sett out by certaine committees of Dorchester & Rocksbury in the order therof named the said lands are not yet sett out by them but divided by certaine men of the said towne of Hingham contrary to the said order & contrary to the liking of many in the said towne & the petiĉoners therefore beseech the Court to take the same into their consideration & to give direction that the said order be pursued as it was first intended. [1] The meadows at Conihasset (between Scituate and Hingham) had been given to the townspeople of Hingham by the General Court, May 13, 1640 (Mass. Col. Rec., i. 290).

[2] Anthony Eames will be remembered by any one who took the trouble to investigate the case of Bozoum Allen (ante, p. 172) in Winthrop (vol. ii. p. 221). The trouble arose from the interference by the General Court in a quarrel among the people of Hingham as to whether Allen or Eames should be the captain of their trainband. Eames was naturally a person of some consequence in the town, having been representative many times, commissioner to decide small cases, and lieutenant, before he was chosen captain.

Joseph Armitage of Lynne lets a shallop of 3 tunnes or therabouts unto Abraham Robinson Thomas Ashley & Will^m^ Browne of Cape Anne fishermen [2] till 29. 7. ꝑx with the tackling & appurtenences & they are to pay 3^l^ in money or good

[1] I do not think that this petition was granted in precisely the form wherein it here appears. But under date 2d June, 1641, the Court ordered "that a plantation for the furthering of fishing shall fourth with bee set up at Nantascot, & that all the neck to the end of the furthest beach towards Hingham, where the tide over floweth, shall belong to it; and that such of the present inhabitants of Hingham as will follow fishing & will remove their habitations thither, shall have land and meadows upon Nantasket Neck," etc. There is no patent for a company to be found, however, in the Records.

[2] We cannot easily identify these fishermen, and perhaps it is hardly necessary to do so. Abraham Robinson is found at Gloucester some years after this mention, and Thomas Ashley may be the man of that name who was in Maine 1654; but even if this be the case, not much is gained.

[2] Mr. William Hooke was not the minister of that name, but the brother of Francis Hooke, of Kittery. He must have returned from England very shortly, for he was representative in 1643 as well as in 1637, and died in this country in 1654.

And whereas yo^{r} petiĉoner is heire & assignee of his said ffather deceased, & hath yet obteyned towards satisfacĉon of the premises onely 200 acres in one place where no more can be had & which is no valuable proportion for the said 50^{l}. In tender consideration of the premises yo^{r} petiĉoner humbly prayeth the Court to be pleased to grant him the other 300 acres together in some other place So restes yo^{r} obliged Ed Mellowes. The petiĉon of WILL^{M} SAVILL[2] of Cambridge joyner

Sheweth that wheras he did worke heretofore at Cambridge for M^{r} Nathaniell Eaton and for parte of this petiĉoners pay he received by apprizement one cowe & a steere calfe for 25^{l} w^{ch} then was 5^{l} overvalued at least & out of w^{ch} he payd 9^{l} to workmen in money besides then presently cattle fell more & so have done ever since and now they are not worth above

[1] Two hundred acres were granted to the heirs of Abraham Mellows by the Court to which the petition was presented. Abraham Mellows, with his wife and child, were admitted to the church in 1633; he was freeman May 14, 1634, and died, Savage says, before 1639. This passage confirms Frothingham's statement that he was a partner in the Company for 50^{l}. Edward Mellows was freeman before his father (March 4, 1634), and was afterwards constable, town clerk, selectman, etc. He died in 1650.

[2] William Savill cannot be found in Savage.

[1] For this matter see pp. 176, ante, & 225, post.

[2] That William Bucknam married (first wife) a daughter of Prudence Wilkinson may be seen in Wyman's Charlestown. Savage goes on to say (partly by conjecture) that by this wife he had a son John, whom (or else his son) he thinks is the one spoken of by Sewall as having been dumb for eighteen years. William Bucknam, in his will, gave a smaller fortune to his son John than to his children by his second wife, partly on account of his infirmity, and partly because he was taken by his grandmother, as appears by this passage in the Note-book.

[3] It was in consequence of this petition that the Court appointed (June 2, 1641) Mr. Thomas Mayhew and John

The peticon of THOMAS MAKEPEACE[2] of Dorchester gent

[1] Henry Webb was a merchant who had his house and shop, I suppose, one or two doors below Captain Keayne's, on what is now State Street. He came to Boston 1637, and died September 7, 1660, leaving much to Harvard College in the way of land that is now of the greatest value. Roger Toll was his apprentice, as Savage thinks.

[2] Thomas Makepeace came to Dorchester with his family in 1636. He was there a person of consideration (although I do not find that he ever held office), being almost invariably referred to by the title of Mr. In response to this petition, the Court appointed a committee of three to view and settle "Mr. Makepeace his farme of two hundred acres."

[1] There is some little doubt in the pages of Savage as to whether the name of this man were Richard or Robert, one name being found in the list of freemen, and the other in that of church-members. In the Mass. Col. Rec., however, is record of an order that 12*d.* in a bushel should be paid to Mr. Robert Cooke to make up for the depreciation of corn, amounting to 40^{l}.

[2] It would seem as if George Pollard were related to John, though the fact is not noted by Savage, who says little of either George or John; for whom see p. 175, ante.

[3] "John Webb a^{l}s [blank]" must be "John Evered a^{l}s Webb" (ante, p. 138). I know nothing more of his occupation than is contained in the note on that page. The Colonial Record has no notice of this commission. The ketch "Endeavour," it may be remembered, was hired of Joseph Grafton by John Cogan and Thomas Owen until April, 1641 (see p. 202, ante). This commission is in June of the same year, by which time the voyage to Virginia and back there spoken of was, we may hope, successfully accomplished.

Breach of Contract

[1] David Yale (thought by some to be the father of Elihu Yale) "came to New England with his father-in-law, Governor Eaton, in 1637." He lived at Boston chiefly, I should imagine, although he owned land at New Haven, and quitted the country in 1652. There is no mention of him in the Boston Town Record or the Book of Possessions; and from the mention in Massachusetts Colonial Record (vol. ii.) he might have lived anywhere.

[2] The agreement here referred to between Garret and Edwards may be found set down at length earlier in the Note-book (ante, p. 176).

[1] It might seem from this as if John Eells was about to return to England. This may possibly have been the case. He is, however, heard of by Savage at Newbury in 1645 as a "beehive-maker," and his death is by him set down for 1653. The name of Thomas Allyn, of Barnstable, may be found in the church register, though not elsewhere to my knowledge. An indenture to the same effect as the above, together with articles of agreement between the same parties and a letter of attorney, etc., may be found at great length post, p. 239 et seqq.

[2] Of John Moses and John Guy I can find no mention at all in Savage. Thomas Keyser has obtained a species of fame through his mention by Winthrop (vol. ii. p. 231), where are related certain operations of one Smith and his mate Thomas Keyser in a voyage undertaken by them to the coast of Guinea after negroes. Keyser was a seafaring man of whom little other remembrance was preserved.

William Latham was a more obscure inhabitant of Duxbury, whither he moved from Plymouth. He had come over in the "Mayflower" as servant to Governor Carver. (See Bradford, pp. 447 and 450.)

Samuell Nash[1] of Weymouth in New England shoomaker late of Burrough greene in the County of Cambridge makes a letter of Attorney to Enoch Lunt of Weymouth in N E blacksmith to rec 40[l] of Thomas Stevens of Comberton in the County of Cambridge aforesaid yeoman due from John Dontree of Papworth in the said County y. Stevens hath the bond 25. 41. [1—6]

Forasmuch as M[r] George Story[2] & Gooddy Sherman seeme to lay divers imputations on me for some advise that I have in the simplicitie of my heart given them or one of them or her husband now being purposed God willing to visit my friends in England I thinke good being thereto requested to declare myselfe hereby in the said matter w[ch] I would have done sooner if I had bin sooner requested of either syde but on the contrary I was intreated by M[r] Keayne to forbeare because as he said he thought they would have brought the things in publick themselves before this. And first I doe say that having heretofore heard some probable things on gooddy Shermans parte I was of opinion if things were so & so that she should have had satisfaction for her sowe. Yet hearing of M[r] Keaynes confidence on the other side before the action tryed I was in suspense & advised goodman Sherman to goe by the way of the Elders first and afterwards when so it could not be agreed yet I againe perswaded goodman Sherman in my owne chamber if it were possible to compound it upon reasonable terms [235] before the tryall for I feared that M[r] Keayne had proofes unknown to gooddy Sherman.

Secondly when the verdict & iudgment was past I advised them to beare themselves silently at least if they could not be satisfied for feare of some corporall punishm^{t} and I advised them to submitt as farre as they could wth a good conscience & I would help them to draw it up in writing if they would but they refused. After the executions a good while for w^{ch} the Lord is witnesse I was heartily grieved hearing our Reverend teacher M^{r} Cotton presse that point of Zacheus repentence for using too severe exactions w^{ch} peradventure yet he had Law for I resolved I would sometime or other remember M^{r} Keayne of it (whomever I tooke to be a consciencious & upright man in the generall & so hold him still to be) if that I should have a faire occasion, whereupon one Lordsday when the Sacram^{t} was at Boston being the next day as I remember after the newes that it was supposed M^{r} Prynne had sent me money for my passage I comming home was very ill in my stomach & went to M^{r} Story for a little stroug water [and having drank my spirit a little revived,—crossed out] and then remembering my purpose afores^{d} I perswaded M^{r} Story to thinke of some yeilding to M^{r} Keayne as farre as he & gooddy Sherman could doe wth a good conscience promising that I would use all my interest in M^{r} Keayne for to get restored all their dammages to them or in words to that effect & no otherwise other words I might speak w^{ch} I doe not remember & herein cannot be more particular because George Story refused yesterday to let me then see or have a coppy of the writing he hath behind my backe [illegible] & divulged concerning these things.

[1] Samuel Nash is noted in Savage as Plymouth 1632, and Duxbury 1643. It may be this man, but I should think it unlikely. Enoch Lunt, one would think, was about to return, if he had not already returned to England.

[2] I fear that the whole tale of Mr. George Story and Goody Sherman and Captain Keayne's sow is too long to insert in this note. It was a most trivial dispute at first in regard to the ownership of a certain pig, claimed by Mistress Sherman, which had been killed by Captain Keayne. But it was carried on with such vigor that it finally embroiled the whole Colony. It may be seen at large in Winthrop (vol. ii. pp. 69, 116).

Fourthly all these motions and advises to them was of my owne good will to them without any by respect as farre as I knowe my owne heart & without the privity consent or setting on of M^{r} Keayne or any of his or for him except God onely.

Lastly I never advised M^{r} Keayne in his actions or any of them against the said partyes either before or since the executions or anything therabout All these to the best of my remembrance I tender on my oath to be recorded that both parties may have coppies therof if they please and I desire it may be satisfactory as well in my owne defence as if need be betweene the said partyes for peace sake wthout favor feare or assertion of either syde. 5. 24. 41.

[1] Robert Wing came to New England at sixty years of age in the year 1634. He grew old very fast, however, as Savage justly observes, having employed his time to such advantage that in 1647 he was over eighty; and having nothing to live upon, he prayed the General Court for relief, whereupon he was respited from a fine he had incurred.

[2] Elizabeth Thorpe was, I suppose, some relation to Henry Thorpe of Watertown, but what I cannot say.

[3] John Lawrence was for a long time a resident at Watertown, where he had many children, but finally moved to Groton, and died 1667.

[4] John Seabury bought, in 1639, with leave of the town, Walter Merry's house, and half an acre under it, in the of John Button & Thomas Joy witnesses Thomas Marshall & Benjamin Gilham.

Anne Norton of Hingham widowe of William Norton her late husband deceased complaines against M^r^ Samuell Warde[1] of Hingham in an accon of the case. She saith that her husband being heretofore indebted in 19^s^ unto the said Samuell for cloath her husband told her that the said Samuell requested him to selle him a peece of his medowe which her husband could not well spare & she now much wanteth and she confesseth her husband told her he did sell the said Samuell some medowe but what or how much she knoweth not & that about 20^s^ more besides the said 10^s^ was payd by the said Samuel for the same being in all but 30^s^ wheras the meddowe that the said Samuell claymeth by the said sale is & was much more worth at the time of the said sale than the said 30^s^ that is to say foure pounds or thereabouts as the said plaintiffe hath heard & verily believeth & hopeth she shall be able to prove And further the said Anne Norton complayneth that the said Samuell hath falsely said before divers witnesses that she did remove a land mark[2] & place another stake in another place in the said ground which is to her great discredit. And she further complaineth that since her said husbands death she mowed her owne ground as she conceived w^th^out any question by the said Samuell made but the last yeare he claymed parte of that she mowed Therefore the said plaintiffe saith she is damnifyed by the said slanderous words forty shillings and further craveth of this honoured Court that according unto equity either she may be satisfied for the full value of the said meddowe or that Mill Field, and so was allowed an inhabitant. The land is entered in the Book of Possessions as about half an acre, next to Merry's own house, near Merry's Point. Thomas Marshall and Benjamin Gilham were, the one a ferryman, and the other a ship-carpenter, of whom we have already heard, as well as of John Button and Thomas Joy.

[1] Samuel Ward's alleged conduct in this case was not in keeping with his general reputation. He was representative in 1637 and in March, 1638. He was made town clerk in 1646. Savage thinks him to have been the man who gave his name to Ward's Island and the island itself to Harvard College.

M^ris^ Blackbornes letter of Attorney to M^r^ Tho: Fowle dated 25. 5. to be testified & acknowledged under his hand. 29. 5. 41.

M^r^ Collins I have no leisure to dispute nor any great abilities thereunto but for my love and obligement to you and yours I shall make bold to advise you according to the best understanding I have both in matters of God and the King touching which things you are now unhappily [indecipherable] I myself have had opinion that Apostles, Prophets and Evangelists ought to [continue] as well as pastors or teachers until the coming of Christ. Wherein if I have prophesied and still must my [desire is to be] informed by the learned in England, to which purpose partly I am goeing thither. You would wonder how many things may be said for it out of Gods word. Much also may be said against it. It is a great controversy. The Parliament and divines in England and elsewhere seem to be divided upon it. [238] But you have [reasoned] upon this [rock] to deny all Churches because you cannot see the [continuance, or consequence ?] of either of these two as I conceive. You seem not to be well [versed] in government things. You come but newly to [consider]. My advice is suspend a while your judgment, confess your [ignorance] retract all [peremptory] speeches and so return unto your brethren in this [Church ?]. Mark this I pray you, you must not unchurch churches for small nay great defects, nor unbrother brethren neither for some slips. [Again] you seem to deny Christian [Ministration] a most dangerous thing, yea so dangerous as that I think you little think or know of the danger thereof.

[1] This monopoly was granted by the General Court June 2, 1641, for three years.

All the [scriptures] that I hear you urge for yourself on this point are most grievously mistaken by you [and perhaps deceive others] for the most part. I say the main [scriptures] used by any [antagonist] against civil government are to be understood as far as I can judge of [times and things] future in the great day of the [indecipherable] and not literally. Also secondly what some doe blindly deny, but I say I dispute not but advise, and that is that you readily submit yourself to our sovereign Lord the King's Majesty and all his lawful Substitutes whatsoever whomsoever and wheresoever, and herein also confess your [ignorance]. He that hath no need of law and none of God no need of repentance let him say he hath no need of ministry.

Lastly for your [refuge ?] if you should fear any hard use upon your person [by corporal punishment] stand upon your ministry received in England be in possession of the [hands?] of the (ministry[1]) [presbyterie ?] there and then by the great Charter of England and other good laws and customs of our English nation you are freed of such punishment, for no [man] will degrade you here. And I hope [and am assured] the magistrates will be so wise as not to touch you in that way. If you have not your [orders] to show yet allege [that you] can prove it to be so that you are a Minister [ordained] in England. Do not fail herein nor think this [frivolous]. I shall pray for you and do the best I can to sweeten some of the Chief towards you before I go, God willing.

Yours while [indecipherable]

THOMAS LECHFORD.

And for you, Francis Hutchinson I am very sorry for your sins and calamity. For Gods sake be wise and yet return to your [worn off]. Consider the things I say to your brother [what is written concerneth yourself mightily]. For your [fabulous] letters and speeches, lay it on your zeal or ignorance and misinformation. Crave the pity of the ministers. First get them to intercede for you to the magistrates. Use all speed and diligence herein, and as I have not been unmindful of you so will I not forget you [again] to the chiefest I can meet with conveniently before I go. Take this in good part and if you [doe refuse] say [hereafter] you once had such advice. So I yet pray for your return and expediting out of this evil net wherein you are taken. (Thomas Lechford. There must be some yielding in this and other things else you and all will break.[1])

THOMAS LECHFORD.

Written in the margin at two several places.

Touching the eternal sonship of Christ I hope you are so wise as to receive these good and satisfactory reasons out of [scripture] produced to you by those more learned than me and not to [withstand] any longer in denial thereof but profess your faith therein.

And if they stand upon proof let them be interested to give you time so to doe [bear it humbly strictly &c.].

[3] Joshua Foot, an ironmonger of London, was in many ways connected by business with New Englanders. He came to this country in 1653, but died shortly afterwards. Joshua Hewes, a prominent Roxbury man, of whom we have heard before, was administrator to his will, and therefore I doubt not that they had frequent dealings with each other.

O mercy mercy from all the powers of mercy in heaven and on earth to such as [sin] of ignorance: long live England and English friends. Let them remember that wherever yet a man travel from East to West England is a good land. I am summoned to appear in Court to-morrow being the 1. of 10. 1640. The Lord God direct me &c.

May it please your Worship Mr. Governor and the rest of your worships. The occasion of coming here this term before your worships is [about] a certain warrant sent forth against mee which is this to the [effect] of an information by the grand jury in Sept. last. Since that time the General Court was pleased to say something to mee when they brake up as for good counsel to me about tenets and disputations which I have held, advising mee to bear myself in silence and as became mee, I know not how to take that at the present because of a presentment that I know was [on foot] against mee. Yet according to that advice I have been hitherto and shall God willing be ready to carry myself for hereafter, and for this matter and time indeed I desire not to trouble your Worships with long speech to divert or hinder your other occasions. I am no pleader by nature. Oratory I have little, and if I had never so expert a faculty that way I should not now use it to make any full defence of my matters; [[1]yet for that part of pleading according to the law of England which consists in chirography I could,] and as for that other part of pleading which consisteth in chirography wherein I had some little skill I do not desire neither to use any of that. Your Worships know that it concerns every man in his answering matters laid to his charge, in pleading to look first to the jurisdiction of the Court, next to the [person] then to the right and so forth to the [plaint and action] of crime and then to look to the challenging of the jury. To cut off all that I desire your Worships to be pleased to accept of this my short acknowledgement that I have, I do confess, too far meddled in some matters of church government and the like which I am not sufficient to understand or declare; and although once I thought myself bound in conscience to say some of those things I have said, yet now I am ashamed of many of them.

INDEX.

In finishing this Index, the Editor does the last and probably the most important part of his work in the preparation of this book. The Index has been constructed with much care, and it is hoped that it will prove useful. The references have been made to the manuscript pages, except in cases where, a name occurring only in the notes, it was thought best to use the book-page with the letter n attached. Such references, then, as 160, n., refer to the book-page. It is hoped that this arrangement may prove as convenient to readers on examination as it has proved to the Editor in preparation.

Not a few errors in the work have been detected in the course of making and verifying this Index. It would be idle, however, to imagine that by the correction of these the Note-book is given to the world without blemish; and for such errors as may remain to annoy the reader the Editor presents herewith his most hearty regrets.
